Clinton seeks bridges to Muslims

The Associated Press

Treaty signed – A6

AMMAN, Jordan — Eager to build on historic peace in the Middle East, President Clinton said Wednesday the United States is not at war with the Muslim world but stands against extremists "who cloak themselves in the rhetoric of religion and nationalism."

"We respect Islam," Clinton declared, seeking to build bridges with peacemaking Muslims while giving no ground to terrorists trying to derail the U.S.-led peace effort. He received loud applause in the first-ever speech by an American president to Jordan's parliament.

Denouncing forces of terror, Clinton said, "You cannot succeed, you will not succeed, you must not succeed, for you are the past, not the future."

On a fast-moving journey through the region, Clinton began the day in Cairo and then traveled to a desert signing ceremony for the treaty between Israel and Jordan. He urged the two sides to follow up and "make this peace real."

Earlier, Clinton pressed Yasser Arafat on "the absolute necessity" of combatting Islamic militants in Gaza and the West Bank town of Jericho. Clinton said the Palestine Liberation Organization chief gave him a "very clear, unambiguous response" in the affirmative.

From the sprawling presidential palace in Cairo to the domed parliament building in Amman — and at the desert signing ceremony in between — Clinton sounded the same message: The champions of peace have the upper hand and there's no turning back.

Addressing the Jordanian parliament, Clinton rejected the notion that there are irreconcilable religious and cultural differences between the Muslim world and the United States.

"America refuses to accept that our civilizations must collide," he said.

Sixteen Islamic bloc members and at least three others boycotted Clinton's address to the 80-member parliament.

Clinton said the world does face a battle between tyranny and freedom, terror and security.

Clinton traveled to Damascus early today, trying to nudge Syrian President Hafez Assad toward an agreement. "I expect ... some progress," Clinton said.

Cyclist promotes Red Ribbon Week

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

MURTAUGH – "Get high on life," the motorcycle-racing principal of Murtaugh High School told his students Wednesday at a Red Ribbon Week assembly. "Get high on your hobbies, not on drugs."

Then Keith Adams went on to show the kids how he practices what he preaches.

It's not a sight you'd expect to see – the principal dressed in flashy pink and purple riding gear and doing wheelies atop a 10-foot-high iron cage. But Keith Adams is not an ordinary principal.

At age 42, he's been competing in motorcycle trials for the past 18 years. He's won seven consecutive senior national titles, more than anyone has ever won before. His goal is 20 in a row.

"I started riding just to get away and see the mountains," said Adams, standing beside his Aprilia (Italian-made) off-road racing bike, "but I've competed in everything all my life, playing college football and basketball and track."

Before long, Adams had a sponsor, the Trial Shop in Tampa, Fla., and he began hitting three- to 15-mile competitive trails everywhere from Pennsylvania to Ohio to Nebraska to Wyoming. Most of the races are through mountains, over boulders, across creeks and waterfalls. Racers score points according to how well they balance their bikes.

Adams competes at the highest levels, but this is still an amateur sport, so there's no prize money.

Back home, Adams leads lots of school assemblies, mostly to the tune of "Whoa" and "Wow." At the end of his stunt demonstrations, he rides all the way down a road on the back wheel of his cycle.

"I like watching it but I don't want to do it," said Seyler Hurd, 16, at the Murtaugh assembly. "Four-wheelers are enough for me."

Lisa Funk, 11 and a student at Murtaugh Elementary School, agreed.

"It's scary," she said.

Nine-year-old Bradly Samora sounded a little more adventurous.

State board wants 14% fund boost

The Associated Press

POCATELLO — The state Board of Education has agreed to seek a 14.7 percent increase in general state tax revenue for public school support in the budget year that begins next July 1.

The board, meeting Wednesday in Pocatello, endorsed the $712 million proposal from a coalition representing the state Department of Education, teachers, administrators, trustees and parents. The request will be forwarded to the Legislature when it convenes in January, and retiring state schools chief Jerry Evans said he does not consider it extravagant.

"I've described it as the Pillsbury Dough Boy budget. If you punch it here, it will stick out here; if you pull it here, it will come out here," Evans said.

"We believe it reflects both the needs of Idaho's public schools and the state's ability to provide for those needs," Idaho Education Association President Monica Beaudoin said.

If approved, the appropriation would be a $91.5 million increase from the $620.5 million lawmakers allocated from the general fund for the current spending year. This year's appropriation is 17.5 percent higher than last year, a record $92.5 million increase.

The $712 million request includes money for an average 6 percent salary increase for teachers whose average pay now ranks 47th among states nationally. Andrus administration budget managers instructed all state agencies to factor a 6 percent employee pay hike into their requests.

Also within the coalition request is funding for school districts to add staff to handle an estimated statewide enrollment increase of 4,300 students, and for hiring more teachers and other employees to meet the Legislature's call for reducing the number of students in each elementary classroom.

Group says Craig, Kempthorne support gridlock

Kempthorne

By Meredith Cohn
States News Service

WASHINGTON – Idaho's Republican senators, Larry Craig and Dirk Kempthorne, were major contributors to gridlock this Congress, supporting filibusters most of the time, a bipartisan group of former senators charged Wednesday.

Craig and Kempthorne voted to end filibusters and vote on legislation just 10 percent of the time, the private group Action Not Gridlock reported.

The Idaho senators were among other GOP senators blasted by the group for "standing in the way of democracy" by blocking votes more times in the past four years than in the Senate's first 140 years.

Senators, mainly Republicans, have used the filibuster 42 times this Congress to stall legislation, and have threatened to use the tactic 10 times that number, according to former Sen. Floyd Haskell, D-Colo., a member of the retired senators' group.

Reform legislation killed this year by the filibuster or threat of one include mining, Superfund, safe drinking water, lobbying disclosure and health care.

Republicans, as the minority party in the Senate with 43 members, argue that the filibuster often became their only recourse when Democrats sought to pass bad legislation or pursued passage of bills without enough debate. If Democrats were the minority, they might have done the same.

"If you look at the individual votes, they were an attempt to stop bad legislation, like the Western grazing fee increase and

Saddam's grip slips

Arizona Republic

WASHINGTON — Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Dennis DeConcini said Wednesday he made an unannounced stop in Iraq and was told by rebel groups that Saddam Hussein's grip on power was "tenuous."

"He's coming apart at the wheels to some extent, but he's got such heavy intimidation," DeConcini, D-Ariz., said in a telephone interview. "He has had to cut rations in half for the general public, and some of the military units' rations were cut."

Iraq is feeling the effects of stringent trade sanctions imposed by the United Nations four years ago. Saddam remains in power even though his country is in economic ruin.

Kitten carries high price

The Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — A death threat, the likelihood of being forced out of business and the possibility of lawsuits are the price pet store owner Tim Jandebeur is paying for selling a kitten that later died of rabies.

Hundreds of people who played with kittens in his store may have to get rabies shots, though no cases of the deadly disease in humans have been reported.

"You want to know the truth, I think I'm out of business," said Jandebeur, owner of the Concord Aquarium and Pet Store for four years. "My wife and I are scared."

Most pet stores, from independents to chain stores, take precautions to protect themselves and their customers.

Several store owners said Jandebeur took a risk by letting kittens run around his shop so that customers could play with them. Other stores don't let animals run free, and some — unlike Jandebeur's — don't take kittens from the public.

After one kitten sold by Jandebeur died of rabies and four others that probably had the disease also died, state health officials called on anyone who bought kittens at the store or played with them to get shots. They said as many as 37 kittens at the store could have been exposed to rabies.

By Wednesday, health officials had accounted for all of those kittens and expected to release test results on the last 12 of them by Thursday. Five that were still at the store did not have rabies.

In a talk show on WKXL radio, Jandebeur accused the news media of distorting the story and exaggerating the threat. He said his 5-year-old son is getting rabies shots, though he is not himself.

After the rabies report surfaced, he said, the store did only $3 in business Tuesday morning. And he said he had received one death threat: "Someone called and said that he would come down and kill me if his kid had rabies."

Blustery, cold, wet conditions sweep across Northwest

The Associated Press

Cold air and rain blew into the Northwest Wednesday with wind gusting to 73 mph.

In the East, frost and freeze warnings were in effect as far south as the Carolinas.

Low pressure moving into the Northwest helped force a cold front eastward across Washington and Oregon, spreading rain and turbulent weather across much of the region.

Gusty wind blew from Washington to Montana, with the strongest gusts along the coast. During the morning, wind gusted to 73 mph near Bay Center, Wash.; 64 mph at Netarts, Ore.; 58 mph at Astoria, Ore., and 48 mph at Hoquiam, Wash., the weather service said.

A gust to 80 mph was recorded at a lodge on the slope of Mount Hood. Farther inland, wind blowing down the eastern slope of the Rockies hit 56 mph at Cut Bank, Mont., helping boost temperature into the upper 50s.

High wind warnings and watches were posted along sections of the Washington and Oregon coasts, and in the northern Oregon Cascades.

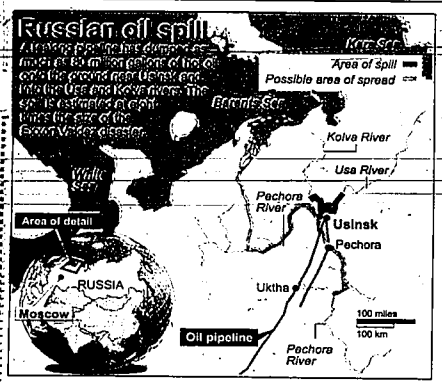

A large high pressure system had settled across the middle Mississippi Valley region, generating fair but very cool weather across much of the central part of the nation.

During the morning, temperatures dipped into the 20s from the central Rockies to the middle and upper Mississippi Valley, with temperatures in the 30s and 40s extending eastward into parts of the Ohio and Tennessee valleys. Watertown, S.D., posted a wind-chill reading of just 4 above zero.

Lincoln, Neb., tied its 52-year-old record for the date with a low of 20 degrees.

Afternoon temperatures remained in the 40s around parts of the upper Great Lakes.

The cool air was expected to move eastward during the night, and frost and freeze advisories were issued for parts of Ohio, Indiana and North Carolina, the weather service said.

Response to oil spill draws hot criticism

MOSCOW (AP) — Russian newspapers criticized the government and an oil company Wednesday for their slow response to a huge oil spill in the Arctic region of northern Russia.

"It's sad that our officials noticed the catastrophe only after Americans blew the whistle," the influential daily Izvestia said.

"Regrettably, it has become customary that reports on our ecological disasters come from the West," echoed the liberal daily Segodnya.

Russian officials disagreed about the size of the spill and the time it occurred, but claimed it posed no serious environmental threat.

Energy Department officials in Washington said it could range from 4.5 million gallons to more than 80 million gallons, which would make it among the worst oil disasters ever.

The spill extends over the frozen ground like a ribbon about three feet deep, 40 feet wide, and six to seven miles long, Deputy Energy Secretary Bill White said in Washington.

Sverre Sivertsen, of Norway's National Pollution Control Board, estimated that 700 spills soak the tundra each year.

Oslo wants more information because the crude could reach the Pechora River, which flows into Arctic waters near Norway's rich Barents Sea fishing grounds.

The environmental group Greenpeace said Wednesday that oil had already polluted the Pechora. Government officials have said only two tributaries were affected.

Greenpeace also said the spill occurred at peak salmon spawning time.

But at the Komi region's Emergency Situations headquarters, officials said the spill's size was overstated and the Pechora was not affected.

Schools

This year's statewide public school enrollment is roughly 3,600 students above last year's. Officials said the higher estimate for next year is based in part on average increases for the last three years.

Next year's budget request includes $10.4 million, the same as this year, to continue a grant program aimed at integrating new information technology with instruction in public school classrooms.

State Rep. Pam Ahrens of Boise, chairman of the 15-member state Council for Technology in Learning, told the Board of Education that the funding request — the minimum she hopes will be approved — amounts to seed money for the real technology needs of Idaho schools. Ahrens said private industry and community support and involvement, and an emphasis on related college and university teacher education programs, also are needed to put information technology to work for Idaho students.

"Our effort is to get local communities to work towards that," she said. "This is our final opportunity really, since we don't have a highway system, to link the kids in Idaho Falls and Coeur d'Alene, kids in Coeur d'Alene and Boise."

Cyclist

"It looks dangerous, but I might like to do it if I had a lot of practice," he said.

Adams, who lives in Oakley, insists his hobby is safe and, as cycling goes, rather low speed. His wife isn't quite so sure ("She thinks it's OK, I guess"). Of his four sons, only the oldest, who's 20, rides a motorcycle like Dad.

Adams has only crashed once, in San Antonio, Texas, in 1981. He shrugs off the experience.

"I fell off a 25-foot ledge and spent one night in the hospital," he said. "I just didn't have my helmet strap on tight enough."

He carries the battle scar on his forehead.

But Adams is not trying to produce motorcycle enthusiasts, anyway. He would rather talk about the motivational speeches that accompany his demonstrations. The subject is self-discipline.

"You can't concentrate and do this stunt stuff, or anything else, if you are on drugs," he tells kids.

Gridlock

taxpayer financing of campaigns," said Mark Snider, a spokesman for Kempthorne.

He also said, "The Democrats tried to rush through a lot of bills without adequate time for debate."

Democrats have said the minority party wanted to kill legislation simply to deny Democrats victories in an election year.

Action Not Gridlock plans to send out letters to senators and Senate candidates asking them to support changes in Senate rules to restrict the use of filibusters.

Under current Senate rules, as few as 41 senators can stall a bill. Sixty votes – 10 more than a majority – are required to end debate and take a vote. The House does not have the filibuster.

"Filibusters are legislative hostage-taking," said former Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., a member of the group. "It's time we joined together across party lines to break the filibuster stranglehold on democracy."

Proxmire, and four other former senators and cabinet members, at a press conference Wednesday, said the rise in the filibuster – from an average of two in the 1960s to an average of 15 in the 1990s – is a result of a new system in the Senate.

Senators no longer spend the night in the Capitol continuously talking, stalling a vote on the measure and all other Senate action. The senators can now announce plans to filibuster, and the Senate turns to another topic.

Some bills that were filibustered in which Craig and Kempthorne voted against ending the filibuster were: Campaign Finance Reform, Lobbying Disclosure, Brady Bill, National Service, Fiscal 1994 Interior Appropriations, National Competitiveness, Federal Work Force Retirements, Goals 2000, Striker Replacement, Crime Bill, California Desert Protection, Elementary and Secondary Education, National Motor Voter Bill.

The two voted for ending a filibuster on a product liability law.

The remainder of the 42 votes taken to end filibusters were for nominations, appropriations and duplicative votes.

Change in Haiti allows AIDS battle to resume

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — The U.S. intervention to make democracy a Haitian way of life may also help renew the battle against a Haitian way of death.

Political stability and the return of foreign aid will allow the government to resume its struggle against AIDS, which has struck Haiti more virulently than any other nation in the Western Hemisphere, health specialists say.

While promoting that stability in Haiti, however, the 16,000 U.S. troops here must also protect themselves, "in this part of the world," a U.S. Army booklet warns them, "not having sex may save your life."

Abstinence is the best defense. But another weapon against AIDS — the condom — appears to have been left home in some cases. Deploying condoms with the troops turns out to be a complicated matter.

Haiti currently has some 5,000 officially registered cases of full-blown AIDS. Researchers estimate that undiagnosed or unreported cases might bring the real total to something closer to 25,000.

The statistics here, though sometimes shaky, tell a grim story.

Credible studies indicate that 7 percent to 10 percent of the sexually active population of Port-au-Prince, a city of perhaps 1.5 million, is infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, said Dr. Gabriel Timothe, coordinator of the Health Ministry's anti-AIDS program.

AP photo

AIDS has become a major factor in Haiti, seen here by Haitian police and U.S. soldiers wearing rubber gloves while searching suspects.

Nationally, the infection rate is believed to be 3 percent or 4 percent, he said, and the rates may be growing by one percentile a year.

Transmission of AIDS is almost totally heterosexual in Haiti, where common-law polygamy is prevalent, venereal disease is widespread, and condom use is low. At least one-third and perhaps more than half the prostitutes in Port-au-Prince are infected, specialists say.

Things could be worse. The government anti-AIDS program, launched in the mid-1980s, is credited with having kept the AIDS plague in this Caribbean nation below the levels seen in some parts of Africa, where adult HIV infection rates are over 20 percent.

But Timothe said efforts were set back after the Haitian military ousted democratically elected President Jean-Bertrand Aristide in a coup in 1991.

"The incidence of AIDS increased because the Health Ministry lacked the financial capacity to deal with it," he said.

Foreign aid, including assistance to government health programs, was suspended to punish the Haitian generals, and Timothe said the militarily government was not committed to the anti-AIDS campaign. In addition, political terror in the cities and countryside inhibited social and health workers.

"With the political crisis, we couldn't produce educational materials, we couldn't do counseling, we couldn't distribute condoms," he said.

Now that Aristide has been restored to power under U.S. sponsorship, and foreign aid will again flow, Timothe sees two immediate priorities: a new focus on educating Haitian young people about AIDS, and an effort to distribute information and condoms in Port-au-Prince slums via mobile vans.

In the GI tent camps, U.S. Army education begins with the small blue health pamphlet, which warns of infected prostitutes and reminds soldiers, "Getting AIDS will kill you!"

"We're advising at all costs to avoid sexual contact with the local population," said Army Lt. Col. Larry Godfrey, the U.S. task force's chief medical officer.

The pamphlet and Godfrey also advise troops to wear latex or rubber gloves to avoid contact with the blood or other bodily fluids of infected people. In one recent case, U.S. military police wore gloves while overseeing a transfer of Haitian prisoners.

The matter of condoms raises other issues, however.

Godfrey said he had advised units to bring along the contraceptives for soldiers who wanted them — and not just because of possible sex with Haitians.

"We're not just concerned about the local population, but about sex between male and female soldiers," the chief Army doctor said.

A reporter's spot check at one battalion-level medical unit, however, found no condoms stocked.

The battalion doctor, an Army captain who spoke on condition he not be named, said he felt the supplies weren't necessary: The combat battalion has no female soldiers, and his troops are either busy patrolling and performing guard duty, or are confined to their base.

"There just isn't the opportunity," he said.

Godfrey acknowledged that the risk of contracting AIDS may be slim right now. "The system isn't opened up so that they can go out partying on a Friday night," he said. But "it would be irresponsible if we didn't take some measures to provide protection."

He stressed, however, that supplying condoms "doesn't mean that we are encouraging or condoning sexual activities."

2nd airwave auction draws big bucks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The sequel to the government's first auction of the airwaves opened Wednesday with companies bidding more for new wireless communications licenses than they did in the first round of bidding for 10 national licenses in July.

The licenses are for a new service that will let people send and receive a variety of information — faxes, messages and pages — without being tethered to phone lines.

Bids in the opening round Wednesday totaled $186 million, compared with a total of $103.7 million offered by 27 companies in the July auction. By the time that auction was over, after 47 rounds, the U.S. Treasury received more than $600 million.

Twenty-eight companies are now competing for 30 licenses to provide the regional service. The United States is divided into five regions covering a total of 210 million people.

Study suggests abortion-cancer link

WASHINGTON (AP) — Women who have abortions may increase their risk of breast cancer by 50 percent, according to a new study in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute.

Experts say the conclusion needs more study.

Researchers at the Fred Hutchinson Cancer Center in Seattle based their conclusion on an analysis of interviews with 845 breast cancer patients and 961 healthy women of the same age group.

The scientists, led by Janet R. Daling, compared answers to questions about the women's reproductive histories and concluded that there was a statistical suggestion that those who had induced abortions were more likely to have breast cancer.

"Highest risks were observed when the abortion was done at ages younger than 18 years — particularly if it took place after eight weeks gestation — or at 30 years of age or older," the study said.

The risk was not affected by the number of abortions or by other reproductive experiences, such as live births or miscarriages, the study said.

Dr. Noel S. Weiss, a co-author of the study, said in an interview that it would be "premature" for women to make any abortion decision now, based on the study.

Guns built for war now fire the sounds of peace

WADI ARABA, Israel-Jordan Border (AP) — The guns of Jordan and Israel, once trained on each other across this scorching desert, fired a salute Wednesday as the two nations pledged to end 46 years of war and make the peace last forever.

Leaders from both sides and President Clinton cited the desert as a symbol of the once-arid relations between the two neighbors that now can flourish.

"Our generation and the next, we are the ones who will transform this barren place into a fertile oasis," Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin of Israel told 5,000 guests.

"The time has now come not only to dream of a better future but to realize it," the 72-year-old former general said, standing on a onetime minefield cleared and asphalted for the occasion.

King Hussein of Jordan said the treaty was not "simply a peace of paper ratified by those responsible."

"It will be real ... No more deaths, no more misery, no more suspicion, no more fear, no more uncertainty," said Hussein.

Clinton warned Arab hard-liners not to turn to bloodshed "in their zeal to kill hope and keep hatred alive."

"We cannot, we must not, we will not let them succeed," he declared. His presence generated the most excitement, with teen-agers from both sides jumping in the crowd for a better view.

Shortly before the ceremony, guerrillas of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah fired rockets into northern Israel in an apparent gesture of disapproval of the colorful ceremony near the Red Sea.

Clinton, who started a six-nation tour of the Middle East Wednesday, is to go to the Syrian capital today in an effort to draw President Hafez Assad back into the stalled Israeli-Syrian peace talks.

Hussein, Rabin and Clinton paid homage to all the fallen of the Arab-Israeli wars, observing a minute of silence for the war dead.

"I believe they are with us on this occasion and at this time as we come together to ensure, God willing, that there will be no more death," Hussein said.

The audience included Israeli and Jordanian war veterans.

Shmuel Amran, 47, lost his left leg during an artillery duel in 1968 when he was an Israeli soldier chasing Arab infiltrators in the Jordan Valley.

He posed happily on crutches with members of the Jordanian army band.

"For my whole life there has been a closed border between Israel and Jordan. We always saw them from a distance. Now I'm among them. It is a very special day for me," Amran said.

The hour-long ceremony began with the army bands from Israel and Jordan playing their national anthems, then a joint rendition of America's "Star-Spangled Banner."

While the music soared, the two armies used 25-pound artillery shells for a 21-gun salute, alternating between Jordanian and Israeli batteries.

An Israeli and Jordanian girl, each of whom lost a grandfather in the 1967 Middle East war, presented bouquets to the leaders. A Muslim sheik chanted verses from the Koran, and a Jewish rabbi recited a Psalm from the Bible.

"I realized suddenly that starting from working with papers and dreaming things, it all started to be true, to be reality. I was really sitting here trembling," said a 44-year-old Israeli diplomat, Nitza Raz.

King Hussein of Jordan lights Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's cigarette after the two signed a peace treaty.

'The time has now come not only to dream of a better future but to realize it.'

— Yitzhak Rabin, Israeli prime minister

The accord, only the second forged by an Arab country since Egypt made peace with Israel in 1979, was signed by Rabin and Prime Minister Abdul Salam Majali of Jordan, as Clinton and the king looked on.

The peace came at dizzying speed, barely three months after Hussein said Jordan was no longer bound to work with other Arab nations for a comprehensive peace.

The treaty addressed problems over water rights and territory along a border that has been largely quiet for two decades.

It drew a mixed reaction from Jordanians, who saw a measure of defeat in giving up their claims to disputed land despite the fact that Hussein, a descendant of the Prophet Mohammed, keeps control over Jerusalem's Muslim holy sites. That clause caused Palestinian ire.

The Jordanian government banned rallies Wednesday, a day after the country's largest fundamentalist group drew a crowd of 5,000 to a protest in Amman.

Security was tight throughout the ceremony, with security agents patroling the blacktop and bleachers with bomb-sniffing dogs. Armored personnel carriers from both sides roamed the surrounded desert and helicopters clattered overhead.

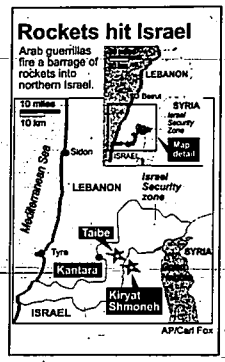

Jordanian intellectuals and opposition politicians said they would resist normalizing relations with Israel, even though the borders are to open Nov. 1 and the two sides are to establish embassies before the end of November.

Jordanians of Palestinian origin, fearing that the treaty would destroy their dream of returning home one day, have criticized it bitterly. But Jordanians in the bleachers at the treaty ceremony occasionally erupted in shouts of "Long live the king!"

A few Jordanian waiters tried to talk to the Israeli army women in T-shirts handing out water bottles in the broiling sun, but were discouraged because few spoke Arabic.

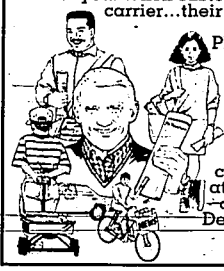

Jordan hopes the treaty with Israel will bring economic prosperity, attracting investments that will relieve them of $6.8 billion dollar in foreign debt.

The United States has promised to write off the $980 million owed by Jordan, and the 50 American guests brought by the White House included those seeking to promote Middle East investments.

Execution rejected in student's murder

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — A judge rejected the death penalty Wednesday and instead sentenced three men to 18 years in prison for the murder of American student Amy Biehl.

Dozens of young blacks chanted "Settler! Settler! Bullet! Bullet!" and ran through the streets after learning of the sentence. "Settler" is a term used for whites by black militants, and their words echoed those witnesses said were shouted by Biehl's killers: "One Settler! One Bullet!"

High Court Judge Gerald Friedman said Biehl "was killed for one reason only, namely because she had white skin." Friedman imposed the sentences a day after convicting the young black defendants of killing the Fulbright scholar when she was in South Africa helping educate voters.

Catholic school refuses to immunize

LONDON — Britain's leading Roman Catholic private school is refusing to immunize its pupils against measles, mumps and rubella because it says part of the vaccine provided by the government was developed from an aborted fetus.

Health department officials deny the claim.

Father Leo Chamberlain, head teacher at Ampleforth College in North Yorkshire, said the vaccine was unethical as some of it came from the tissue of a fetus aborted over 20 years ago.

"An absolute respect for human life requires the condemnation of direct abortion and a refusal to benefit from the product of an evil action," he told BBC radio on Wednesday.

Chinese general, party leader dies at 83

BEIJING — Gen. Yang Dezhi, a former senior leader of China's Communist Party and military, has died at 83.

Yang was chief of the general staff of the People's Liberation Army before he retired, and a member of the party's Central Advisory Commission and the Central Military Commission.

He died Tuesday of an unspecified illness, the official Xinhua news agency said.

He commanded forces in China's war against Japan and its civil war against the Nationalists led by Chiang. He also led forces in the 1950-53 Korean War. He became a general in 1955.

Soldiers fight with Hutus in Burundi

NAIROBI, Kenya — Burundian soldiers clashed with civilians armed with rifles and grenades near the capital of Bujumbura, a military spokesman said Wednesday. At least 25 people were killed, all civilians.

Lt. Col. Nicodemus Nduhirubusa said the civilians apparently were extremist Hutus, rivals of the Tutsis who dominate the Burundi military. The growing hostility has raised fears of a war here like the one that tore Rwanda apart earlier this year.

Nduhirubusa said the fighting with about 50 civilians erupted Monday near the rural town of Mubimbi, about 11 miles northeast of Bujumbura. No soldiers were reported killed.

U.N. requests end to Cuba embargo

UNITED NATIONS — For the third straight year, Cuba won passage of a non-binding U.N. resolution Wednesday calling for an end to the U.S. embargo against the Communist island.

Cuba's margin of victory in the General Assembly increased: 101 nations favored the immediate end of the three-decade-long economic embargo and 48 abstained. Only the United States and Israel voted to continue sanctions.

Serbian tanks tangle with U.N.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnian Serb forces engaged in a rare tank battle with U.N. peacekeepers Wednesday and lost ground on two fronts to government forces.

Three Leopard tanks manned by Danish peacekeepers repelled a Serb T55 tank that opened fire near the northern town of Gradacac when the peacekeepers tried to reoccupy an observation post abandoned after recent sniper attacks.

A U.N. spokesman, Lt. Col. Tim Spicer, said no peacekeepers were wounded in the "fairly intensive firefight." He indicated the Serbs may have suffered casualties, but he had no confirmation.

Although attacks on peacekeepers can prompt retaliatory NATO air strikes, Spicer said that in this case U.N. commanders felt that the immediate return fire by the Danes was the best response.

Bosnian Serbs also tangled with the Danish-manned Leopards last April, when several tanks returned fire with at least 70 shells against Serb artillery positions. Despite the damage in that fight were unclear, but the Serb guns were silenced.

Elsewhere Wednesday, Spicer said troops of the Muslim-led government army captured a strategic Serb barracks during an advance from the government-held town of Bihac in northwestern Bosnia.

Bosnian Serb military sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, admitted that setbacks in the area had prompted some 5,000 Serb civilians to flee.

The Yugoslav news agency Tanjug also cited Bosnian Serb military sources in a report that government troops had "succeeded in suppressing Serb forces" and taking over part of the so-called Grabez plateau, just east of Bihac.

The Bosnian government said Serbs had shelled Bihac from high ground in the area.

The Bosnian Serb news agency SRNA also reported a heavy government offensive on the Serb-held, front-line town of Kupres 55 miles west of Sarajevo.

Government army officials said they were closing in on Kupres from the north and east, taking the last high ground overlooking the town.

Government troops have launched a dozen offensives across northern and central Bosnia in recent weeks. Though they have scored some successes, their territorial gains so far have been relatively modest against the better-armed Serbs, who control about 70 percent of Bosnia.

Fire in train's sleeper car kills 27 in India

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — An early morning fire engulfed a sleeper coach on an express train traveling from Bombay to Calcutta Wednesday.

At least 27 passengers were killed and 13 others severely burned, a news agency said. Most passengers were asleep when the overnight train caught fire at 2 a.m.

United News of India said railroad officials noticed the fire as the train passed a station. The coach was in flames by the time the train halted near the next town, Chakradharpur, about 180 miles west of Calcutta.

Singapore to cane Frenchman

SINGAPORE (AP) — A Frenchman reportedly will be caned five times and spend 14 months in jail because he stayed in Singapore illegally for more than two years and wrote bad checks.

Marcel Aime Faucher, 45, was convicted and sentenced Monday after he pleaded guilty to charges of overstaying his visa and cheating, the Straits Times reported.

Staying illegally in Singapore carries a maximum punishment of two years and at least three strokes of the cane.

Flogging is commonly used on laborers from other countries who continue to work after their work permits expire. But with an efficient system of keeping tabs on the 3.3 million people in this city-state, it is rare for anyone to avoid detection by authorities for 646 days, as Faucher reportedly did.

Boutros-Ghali wins Legion of Honor

PARIS (AP) — U.N. Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali received the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor, France's highest civilian honor, from President Francois Mitterrand on Wednesday.

Boutros-Ghali, accompanied by his wife, told reporters at a ceremony at the Elysee Palace that the award was as much for the United Nations as for himself.

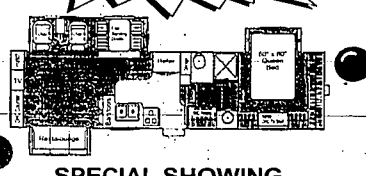

The U.N. chief said the peace accord signed Wednesday by Israel and Jordan was a "first step on a road that will be extremely slow and difficult."

High Court Judge Gerald Friedman said Biehl "was killed for one reason only, namely because she had white skin." Friedman imposed the sentences a day after convicting the young black defendants of killing the Fulbright scholar when she was in South Africa helping educate voters.

Catholic school refuses to immunize

LONDON — Britain's leading Roman Catholic private school is refusing to immunize its pupils against measles, mumps and rubella because it says part of the vaccine provided by the government was developed from an aborted fetus.

Health department officials deny the claim.

Father Leo Chamberlain, head teacher at Ampleforth College in North Yorkshire, said the vaccine was unethical as some of it came from the tissue of a fetus aborted over 20 years ago.

"An absolute respect for human life requires the condemnation of direct abortion and a refusal to benefit from the product of an evil action," he told BBC radio on Wednesday.

Chinese general, party leader dies at 83

BEIJING — Gen. Yang Dezhi, a former senior leader of China's Communist Party and military, has died at 83.

Yang was chief of the general staff of the People's Liberation Army before he retired, and a member of the party's Central Advisory Commission and the Central Military Commission.

He died Tuesday of an unspecified illness, the official Xinhua news agency said.

He commanded forces in China's war against Japan and its civil war against the Nationalists led by Chiang. He also led forces in the 1950-53 Korean War. He became a general in 1955.

Soldiers fight with Hutus in Burundi

NAIROBI, Kenya — Burundian soldiers clashed with civilians armed with rifles and grenades near the capital of Bujumbura, a military spokesman said Wednesday. At least 25 people were killed, all civilians.

Lt. Col. Nicodemus Nduhirubusa said the civilians apparently were extremist Hutus, rivals of the Tutsis who dominate the Burundi military. The growing hostility has raised fears of a war here like the one that tore Rwanda apart earlier this year.

Nduhirubusa said the fighting with about 50 civilians erupted Monday near the rural town of Mubimbi, about 11 miles northeast of Bujumbura. No soldiers were reported killed.

U.N. requests end to Cuba embargo

UNITED NATIONS — For the third straight year, Cuba won passage of a non-binding U.N. resolution Wednesday calling for an end to the U.S. embargo against the Communist island.

Cuba's margin of victory in the General Assembly increased: 101 nations favored the immediate end of the three-decade-long economic embargo and 48 abstained. Only the United States and Israel voted to continue sanctions.

Serbian tanks tangle with U.N.

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnian Serb forces engaged in a rare tank battle with U.N. peacekeepers Wednesday and lost ground on two fronts to government forces.

Three Leopard tanks manned by Danish peacekeepers repelled a Serb T55 tank that opened fire near the northern town of Gradacac when the peacekeepers tried to reoccupy an observation post abandoned after recent sniper attacks.

A U.N. spokesman, Lt. Col. Tim Spicer, said no peacekeepers were wounded in the "fairly intensive firefight." He indicated the Serbs may have suffered casualties, but he had no confirmation.

Although attacks on peacekeepers can prompt retaliatory NATO air strikes, Spicer said that in this case U.N. commanders felt that the immediate return fire by the Danes was the best response.

Bosnian Serbs also tangled with the Danish-manned Leopards last April, when several tanks returned fire with at least 70 shells against Serb artillery positions. Details of damage in that fight were unclear, but the Serb guns were silenced.

Elsewhere Wednesday, Spicer said troops of the Muslim-led government army captured a strategic Serb barracks during an advance from the government-held town of Bihac in northwestern Bosnia.

Bosnian Serb military sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, admitted that setbacks in the area had prompted some 5,000 Serb civilians to flee.

The Yugoslav news agency Tanjug also cited Bosnian Serb military sources in a report that government troops had "succeeded in suppressing Serb forces" and taking over part of the so-called Grubez plateau, just east of Bihac.

The Bosnian government said Serbs had shelled Bihac from high ground in the area.

The Bosnian Serb news agency SRNA also reported a heavy government offensive on the Serb-held, front-line town of Kupres 55 miles west of Sarajevo.

Government army officials said they were closing in on Kupres from the north and east, taking the last high ground overlooking the town.

Government troops have launched a dozen offensives across northern and central Bosnia in recent weeks. Though they have scored some successes, their territorial gains so far have been relatively modest against the better-armed Serbs, who control about 70 percent of Bosnia.

Fire in train's sleeper car kills 27 in India

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — An early morning fire engulfed a sleeper coach on an express train traveling from Bombay to Calcutta Wednesday.

At least 27 passengers were killed and 13 others severely burned, a news agency said. Most passengers were asleep when the overnight train caught fire at 2 a.m.

United News of India said railroad officials noticed the fire as the train passed a station. The coach was in flames by the time the train halted near the next town, Chakradharpur, about 180 miles west of Calcutta.

Singapore to cane Frenchman

SINGAPORE (AP) — A Frenchman reportedly will be caned five times and spend 14 months in jail because he stayed in Singapore illegally for more than two years and wrote bad checks.

Marcel Aime Faucher, 45, was convicted and sentenced Monday after he pleaded guilty to charges of overstaying his visa and cheating, the Straits Times reported.

Staying illegally in Singapore carries a maximum punishment of two years and at least three strokes of the cane.

Flogging is commonly used on laborers from other countries who continue to work after their work permits expire. But with an efficient system of keeping tabs on the 3.3 million people in this city-state, it is rare for anyone to avoid detection by authorities for 646 days, as Faucher reportedly did.

Boutros-Ghali wins Legion of Honor

PARIS (AP) — U.N. Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali received the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor, France's highest civilian honor, from President Francois Mitterrand on Wednesday.

Boutros-Ghali, accompanied by his wife, told reporters at a ceremony at the Elysee Palace that the award was as much for the United Nations as for himself.

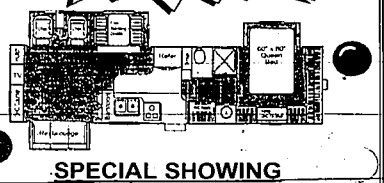

The U.N. chief said the peace accord signed Wednesday by Israel and Jordan was a "first step on a road that will be extremely slow and difficult."

Crapo clearly deserves another term in the House

This election year is shaping up to be a brutal one for congressional incumbents. Thanks to the disgust of American voters, lots of politicians who are used to being called, "Rep." or "Sen." will be going back to "Hey you."

One who shouldn't have much to worry about is Idaho's 2nd District congressman, Mike Crapo. For one thing, he's a Republican, and thus won't carry any Clinton baggage.

More important is the widespread – and correct – perception that Crapo is a vigorous voice of change in the nation's capital. If reform comes to Congress, people such as Crapo will be the reason.

Election 1994

Crapo

Fletcher

Republican Congressman Mike Crapo is running for re-election against Democrat challenger Peggy Fletcher

After his election to Congress two years ago, Crapo quickly established himself as a standout among the House's freshmen crop. He was named to a leadership position among the Republican newcomers, and he immediately went to work pushing for congressional cleanup.

Since then, he can claim involvement in:

• The successful fight to open the "discharge petition" process. Previously, a congressman could publicly support some bill, while privately refusing to sign the petition that would force a vote on it. Now, with the petitioners' identities no longer confidential, individual members will be more accountable.

• Bringing the line-item veto and the balanced-budget amendment to votes on the House floor.

• Eliminating some of the House's select committees, a move aimed at reducing congressional costs.

• A bill to limit use of emergency clauses on spending bills.

• Efforts (unsuccessful so far) to create a "lockbox account" for deficit reduction. Under this concept, money cut from a budget item would be captured for deficit reduction, instead of tumbling back into the pool to be spent on something else.

Most of these issues are mind-numbingly arcane. Only someone of Crapo's legalistic and scholarly bent could get excited about them. But the devil is in the details, and Crapo is singularly able and willing to pursue him there.

But Crapo is not exclusively interested in wonkish fine print. He has a deep concern and understanding of the bread-and-butter issues that affect Idaho, such as water rights, salmon recovering and private-property rights.

After two years in the minority caucus, Crapo has begun building a record to be proud of. If the next Congress swings toward conservative control, he'll be in a position to do even more. Idaho voters should give him the chance.

Stennett understands Idaho

I want to tell you about Clint Stennett, Senate candidate in District 21. He is a good man and a good legislator, and has served us well in his four years in the House of Representatives. He led the way to change the requirement that the state superintendent of public instruction be a school administrator. He pushed a bill through the House that doubled the tax credit for donations to educational foundations. Clint has always been an outspoken proponent for education. Every piece of recycling legislation that has passed in the past four years was sponsored by Clint. He also sponsored a bill that gave a tax credit to businesses that produce recycled products.

Clint was raised on a small dairy farm in Jerome County. He knows the problems facing the small farmer and the issues surrounding our precious water. He knows that agriculture is vital to the state of Idaho, and he will not turn his back on the small farmer. He has said time and time again that agriculture is Idaho's No. 1 industry, and he believes it should be preserved.

Finally, Clint understands the problems facing all of us. His opponent has already spent $65,000 of his own money on this race. Any person who can spend that much money to run for a $6,000 a year job is out of touch with the common man. Clint is not rich; he was raised and educated and works in Idaho. He understands all of us and has proven himself in the Legislature. This is why I will vote for Clint Stennett for Senate on Nov. 8.

Ridinger can represent everyone

In response to the Oct. 24 letter printed in The Times-News by Norma H. Werry: Ms. Werry, your accusations couldn't be further from the truth, and had you done your homework, you could have corrected your own errors. So I will take the liberty of doing it for you right from the beginning.

Republican Party: Mayor Tim Ridinger is very proud to say he's a member of the GOP, and if he thought belonging was all he needed to claim House Seat B, then there wouldn't be a need for the Nov. 8 election, now would there be? He's a representative for all.

Returning calls: Tim keeps a very accurate telephone log dating back three years on paper, and the messages taken off of the machine are logged daily. Upon reviewing these logs, Ms. Werry, it's funny your name or number never appeared once. But if you want to talk to Tim in an adult manner, he would be happy to answer all of your questions.

Budget public hearings: The minutes for every meeting in the past 13 years are public information, and had you checked, you would have seen the mayor's name present at the meetings.

City ordinances: After checking with the Shoshone chief of police, there has never been consent for liquor sold by the drink in the city park. Again, I stress to you, Norma Werry, had you checked your sources, you would have known the truth.

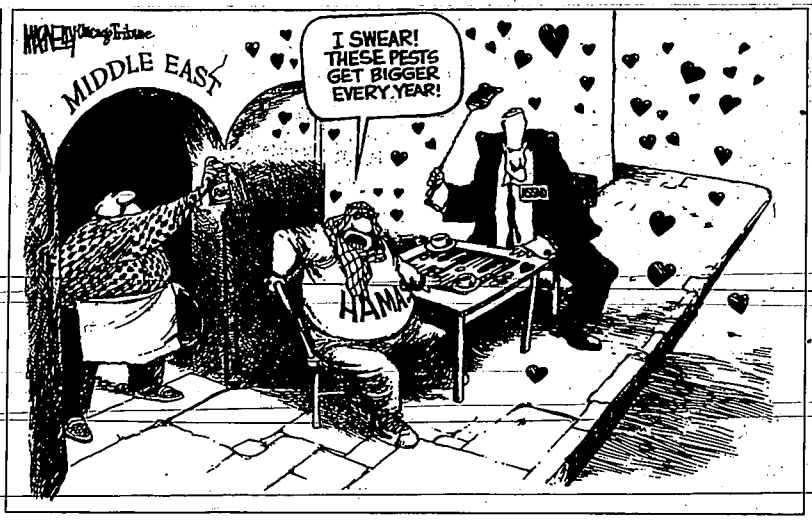

So here is your accountability.

OMI: Monthly reports were printed and also for the public to review at any given time and no, the city council was not rammed through this. Each and every one of them knew exactly what they were voting on. Again, Ms. Werry, had you checked your sources, you would have known the truth.

City business: You should clarify your accusations once again. If you were to ask a direct question, it is certain the mayor would give you a direct answer.

In closing, Tim Ridinger is very accountable and never claimed to be God. He believes strongly in what he is doing and knows it is right. He very much wants to be a representative for all, including you, Ms. Werry.

Ballot measure may be death of Oregon

Cal Thomas

The most frightening entry on any ballot Nov. 8 is not a name like Foley or Cuomo or Kennedy, but something called "Measure 16."

It is an Orwellian demonstration of "newspeak," the effect of which will be to erase what few safeguards remain separating human life from all other living things.

If Measure 16 passes, doctors would be protected by law when they offered lethal drugs to "terminally ill" patients. Supporters claim that enough "safeguards" are built in, such as second and third opinions, written requests for the drugs by the patient and testimonies from others — including at least one non-family member — that the request for immediate departure from this life is rational and sincere.

But as in all matters relating to things of supreme importance, once the precedent of doctor-assisted killing has been established, there will be no turning back.

Just imagine the court battles when some who don't qualify for doctor-assisted killing claim a violation of their constitutional right to end their lives under the equal protection clause.

Indeed, just last May, Federal Judge Barbara J. Rothstein ruled in Seattle that the legal arguments supporting a "right" to an abortion suggested that there was a constitutional "right" to medical help in committing suicide. Her decision is now under review by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, but it proves that once one category of life has been devalued, other categories of life quickly and inevitably are opened for re-evaluation. Especially when such lives no longer "contribute" to society, or become a burden on those who think life should be free of anything but the pursuit of personal pleasure, peace and affluence.

There is a philosophical, moral, political, legal, medical and theological chasm between allowing someone to die — keeping them comfortable with painkilling drugs and affirming their humanity in the process — and causing someone to die. If the elderly and terminally ill are reclassified as "vegetables" in the public mind, or labeled in other ways that deprive them of their full humanity, then all of us are potentially at risk.

Skin color, a person's religion, handicap, age or state of health; the unborn — labels such as these have been affixed to people at some time in our history and made them targets of state tyranny or discrimination designed to "solve" social problems.

The potential for misuse of the findings in the controversial new book "The Bell Curve," in which the authors claim that African-Americans as a class have less intelligence than whites as a class, falls into this pattern. If intelligence, race, religion or physical condition determines a person's value to society, then society may choose who has the right to live and who does not.

Jane M. Orient, executive director of the Association of American Physicians and Surgeons, writes in her book "Your Doctor Is Not In": "Euthanasia is supposed to be purely voluntary on the part of the patient. It is unlikely that people would vote for it otherwise. However, experience in the Netherlands suggests that it won't stay that way. Between 5,000 and 10,000 people are euthanized in Holland each year, of the 128,000 persons who die. The ratio of involuntary to voluntary euthanasia is about 2.5 to 1, and it is not known how many volunteer for a lethal injection in response to social pressure. Some Dutch patients carry a card saying, 'Please do not euthanize me.' For perspective, about 5,000 children were killed in the Nazi euthanasia program."

Oregon has been a leader in efforts to protect wildlife and timber from human predators. It would be a tragedy if Oregonians unleashed a new kind of predator — their doctors.

Cal Thomas writes for the Los Angeles Times Syndicate.

Mellen camp is not family affair

For those of you who may think Jon and Lana Mellen only let friends and relatives hunt on their ranch, I strongly disagree.

Three years ago, we did not know who the Mellens were. My daughter and I drew deer tags for Unit 44 and did not know where to hunt. We called the Fish and Game in Boise and were given a map of the area and some names of some of the ranchers. The day before the season opened, we drove to the Mellen Ranch and asked permission to hunt. Jon Mellen told us he was sorry but that they only let 30 people hunt each year on a first-come, first-serve basis, and that 30 people had already asked and received permission.

The following year we drew for Unit 44 again. This time we called the Mellens in August. I don't think they remembered from the year before but were very gracious and told us that we could hunt. They said we were one of the first to call that year. All they asked of us was to return the key to the gates at the end of the season.

Anyone who believes that the Mellens show favoritism and only let certain people hunt year after year must not understand the process they use to determine who hunts. Even though it is their land, they were very kind and generous to us, even when they had to tell us we could not hunt.

Choir of reason sings 'no' on 1

Let me add my voice to the chorus of reason: Please vote "no" on Proposition 1.

In my ministry, I have met many gay and lesbian people and have yet to meet a single such person who has an "agenda" different than anyone else's – that is, to fit in constructively in society, to work at a meaningful job, to enjoy the company of family and friends and to find a place where they are valued and loved as persons.

I think it is unfair to stereotype all homosexuals as predators, subversives and perverts. Such persons do live among us, but it is more honest and fair to admit that they show up in proportionate numbers among heterosexuals, too. What group in society can justify "casting the first stone"?

The majority of gay people are generally so innocuous that we don't even notice them as such. What we do see and value are the same qualities we respect in anyone – that a person is a competent worker, a good neighbor, a trusted friend and, therefore, someone we have come to care for.

Proposition 1, if passed, has the potential to harm a good many of our neighbors, friends and family members for no good reason. I pray, if your mind is not yet made up, that you will join me in voting a conscientious "no."

Fox fights for positive change

Dr. Anne Fox wants to establish and maintain statewide school discipline! She offers an excellent combination of leadership, experience and common sense.

Bombing range shows Batt soars

Larry EchoHawk couldn't make up his mind about the bombing range without studying the environmental impact statements (after the election). Fortunately, his friends in Washington got him off the hook by taking the matter out of Idaho's hands. I'm sure he'll demonstrate the same leadership style if elected governor; that is, sit on his hands until the environmental impact studies are in on grazing, logging, water rights, mining, the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, etc. Meanwhile, the Bruce Babbitts and other Clinton cronies will make the decisions for him – and, for Idaho.

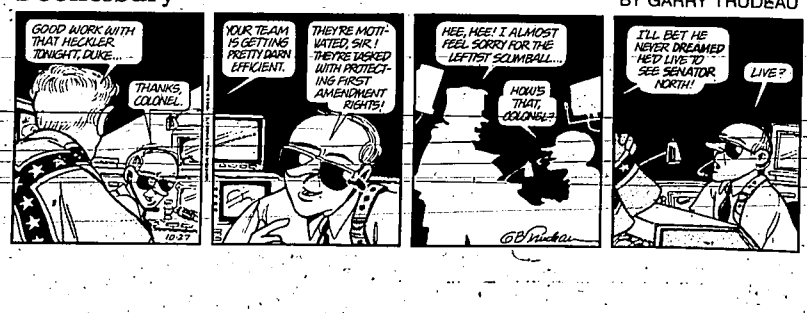

The gist of those environmental impact studies isn't that difficult to predict. Basically, they say that the environment is changed, to some extent, through human economy. Or, we can't have all our cake and eat it too. EchoHawk must know this but, evidently, feels he has to placate his out-of-state contributors. Of course, never having held a job outside politics could be clouding his judgment.

As governor, Phil Batt, like most Idahoans, will respect the environment but will not govern by environmental impact statement alone. As a farmer and businessman, he realizes that leadership isn't that simple.

Ordinance on home color makes citizen feel blue

After reading the article "In decorating, never underestimate the power of color" printed in The Times-News on Oct. 19, I have decided to paint my home "purple" – the color of kings. Surely the queen would approve of that color too.

Oh my gosh! I have a problem. One of the new ordinances in Hollister tells me my buildings "must conform to the color, material and appearance of other residential dwellings within the community."

Now, if the citizens of this "burg" decided to paint "all buildings" purple – I'm sure we could get a big discount on our painting supplies.

We shouldn't decide on "black" which makes things "less pleasurable" and heaven forbid, we paint the city building "red" which brings out a "hot temper and sweaty mood."

In the article, there was no mention of a "color" to repel the 15 dogs in this immediate area. Dogs do leave the color "brown" on our flowers and lawn.

Since thinking things over, I've decided to paint my buildings "red, white and blue." I think Hollister, Idaho, is still in the United States of America.

Oh, yes – I will roll out the "red" carpet for the "powerful people."

Walton, Proposition 1 show politics of mean-ing

I'm so mad at Kelly Walton and his Idaho Citizens Alliance, I could spit! How dare he bring to this peaceful valley that expensive, divisive, mean-spirited and totally unnecessary campaign! I see no evidence that the gays and lesbians among us have any agenda harmful to us.

Mr. Walton is using scare tactics to get money for this hate program. Because of that, I feel obligated to donate time and money to the No On One Coalition to defend these harmless people. But I resent it; I would much rather see that time and money spent on something positive and productive.

And he has the gall to say that we as taxpayers should be happy and willing to pay future governmental legal costs to get this terrible proposition adopted!

Jaquet makes good fit for District 21 seat

I would like to express my support of Wendy Jaquet for state representative, District 21.

She has a wonderful background for understanding the economic and social needs of this district. Her recent work as executive director of the Sun Valley-Ketchum Chamber of Commerce has shown her organizational abilities as well as giving her the opportunity of learning the needs of this district as a whole. Her agenda is simple – save the water and give our children the best educational opportunity possible.

I have read the statements of her opponent, and I feel that he has a highly personal agenda which revolves around the issue of his particular understanding of God and country. I was born in the United States 68 years ago and have watched a number of special agenda politicians come and go. My experience has been that politicians with a personal agenda seldom try to represent the people as a whole, but rather promote their own program of personal beliefs.

When voting for someone to represent our district as a whole, I urge you to vote for Wendy Jaquet.

MVRMC cutbacks mask hospital's identity

Nearly every article concerning the Magic Valley Regional Medical Center relates to plans for expansion, remodeling, buying real estate or an increase in patient rates.

The article dated Oct. 15 on "Hospital trims budget with staff reductions" really bothers me, especially the suggestion by Mr. Bingham that lower-paid licensed practical nurses and nurses' aides could be utilized more and registered nurses less.

I've felt for a long time, since our beautiful Magic Valley Memorial Hospital dissolved into MVRMC, that the present hospital board of directors and the administrator need to take time to reassess what this hospital should be.

There are lots of good programs and workshops offered by MVRMC helping people learn to keep well. Usually free, I assume they are paid for through the income from sick folks (patients).

The hospital has grown tremendously in size, but patient rooms seem smaller. I think it would mean a lot to the community if the board and Mr. Bingham would also consider making MVRMC a "nursing hospital."

"Cutting back" on competent, highly trained and qualified nurses should be the last resort, that is, if those in power decide this will be an institution whose primary purpose is caring for the sick and whose mission statement could be: "Patients are not an interruption of our work. They are the purpose of it."

Koming provides treats, not tricks for District 21

As Nov. 8 draws near and the citizens of the 21st District move to the voting booths, please remember the name of John Koning for representative Seat 21A. John and his family operate a dairy in Gooding County and have for years.

John Koning is not one to talk one way and act another. He has continually displayed his care of the land and environment by how he cares for the land they live on. John knows only too well how vital water projects are and will weed through the showy rhetoric to bring some common sense ideas for the people of south central Idaho in Boise.

John will fight to stop those who seek to take actions against our constitutionally granted rights. John has stated that state legislators should consider themselves "public servants" and that state employees should act likewise. The concerns of civil "tyrants" will be addressed by John's voice and actions. Civil servants should treat the taxpayers with respect and not be blinded to actions which can destroy families or their very livelihood.

John Koning will treat the people of Fairfield and Richfield on an equal field with Gooding and Ketchum. John will treat us all with respect, dignity and integrity. Please, when you step into the voting booth on Nov. 8, and I truly hope you will, make your voice known and vote John Koning, representative 21A.

Letter proves liberals lost touch with reality

I read with interest the letter by Rudy Castro in the Oct. 20 paper. As I read it, I came to a realization that this is an accurate portrayal of how many liberals view the GOP and its candidates. This letter is also a perfect example of how these same liberals have absolutely no comprehension of reality.

Proposition 1 addresses behavior, not individuals

Why should homosexuals and lesbians, which are termed "gays," have special rights? Cigarette smokers were not given special rights! These gay individuals say that Proposition 1 would discriminate against them. Wasn't banning smoking in public places by the government discriminating against the cigarette smoker?

It is not the individual that is being discriminated against. It is the behavior of the individual that is being discriminated against! Just as cigarette smokers have had to learn to change their behavior, so should gays learn to change their behavior. Gays should not be asking for special rights when their sexual behavior is being questioned, not the individual.

Our country was originally based on God. The Declaration of Independence states, our creator, "God." In the Old Testament, whole cities were destroyed because of this sex sin. Are we not encouraging others to do them (sex sins) when we do not discriminate against such sex sins?

There are laws against children smoking or even obtaining cigarettes until they are 18 because smoking is considered harmful to your health with cancer as the major villain. However, being gay is even more detrimental to your health; AIDS is the victim. There are some cures for cancer. There is no cure for AIDS; it is sure death. However, there is nothing warning children against being gay. Why? Which type of discrimination should be most feared – the one that alienates you from man or the one that alienates you from God?

Times-News loses face with its GOP hit parade

The Hartgen Right Wing Republican Express is doing its endorsements again for each of the political offices. The Times-News bi-annually goes through its play-acting routine of interviewing candidates and then endorsing its version of the most qualified. An honest approach would be to print a story on Oct. 1, endorsing the entire Republican ticket except for two or three token Democrats. That would end the charade of being objective and endorsing quality.

Case in point, The Times-News endorsed Ralph Gines, the Republican candidate for state auditor: "Gines has a squeaky clean reputation." Until two years ago, Gines was a "Moonie" and buddies with the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, who controls a strange non-Christian religious sect. The Rev. Moon did two years for tax evasion and married 2,500 couples that he had paired up in one ceremony. Remember the scrawny, pale kids who came to your doorstep selling a rose for $2 or $3. The money went to the Rev. Moon to support the American Freedom Coalition of which Ralph Gines was a director. Moon founded the American Coalition to replace the Republican Party. Squeaky clean, any who has been connected with the Rev. Sun Myung Moon is an irresponsible nut.

Anne Fox – talk about a nut. That woman is emotionally frazzled to the point that she cannot handle the job of being a school teacher and lasted a year or so as school administrator in north Idaho. She is a grant writer. All that means is that she is unstable and cannot hold a job as a teacher.

Water, a big, big issue. The Republican claim to own and protect the Snake River. Water is not and must not be made partisan. It belongs to all of us, not just the Committee of Nine. Larry EchoHawk as attorney general has done a good job of protecting Idaho's water from downstream grabbers. Our next attorney general must be, above all, a good lawyer to represent all of Idaho in the Snake River Adjudication, Mike Burkett must be elected to continue Idaho's water fight. One can safely predict that in the endorsements yet to come, there will be some phony claim about water protection by Republicans.

Then there is the glamorous Butch Otter running for lieutenant governor as a Republican. Otter is an unpredictable loose cannon. Winning the tight-pants buns contest in a Caldwell cowboy bar surely is cute, but it is not much of a credential. The Democrat, John Peavey was a loose cannon 25 years ago when he suggested that enough farm land had been brought into production and that it should be stopped, and now his 25-years ago suggestions are accepted as matters of fact. If there is a criticism of John Peavey, it is that he may be overqualified, but he should be our next lieutenant governor.

Mr. Times-News, just be honest. There should be a banner on the front page of your newspaper during political season stating that this is a hard-core, right-wing Republican rag. Ralph Gines and Anne Fox? Shame, shame, shame.

Letter-perfect Jaquet should ease into election

Experience, enthusiasm, effectiveness! Wendy Jaquet brings these qualities to the Idaho Legislature for District 21. Wendy has proven her ability to bring people together for the common good; and in a district as diverse as ours, we need such talent.

As director of the Sun Valley/Ketchum Chamber of Commerce for 11 years, Wendy Jaquet increased its membership from 148 to 438 members. Wendy brings a spectrum of knowledge ranging from small business and tourism to arts and letters.

I know as a citizen of rural Idaho, I want Wendy Jaquet working for me. Wendy knows that water is a core issue for our whole district, and agriculture is the backbone for our economy. Applying her expertise to the needs of the farming community will benefit all of us.

Wendy Jaquet knows that topping educational needs are new school facilities and the state's ability to aid smaller districts in the building of them, local control of the school budget and moving high technology into the mainstream of public education.

I am confident that Wendy Jaquet has the talent and skills it takes to address the needs and interests of this legislative district. Elect Wendy Jaquet Nov. 8.

Pancake house becomes hair-raising experience

On Oct. 16, my son and daughter and I decided to go to a pancake house for breakfast.

After we were seated, I looked around to see if any friends were there. I couldn't believe my eyes. You would think you were in a hair-dressing parlor. Three waitresses were standing by the coffee urn. Two had hair below their shoulders, one had hair below her waist and every few minutes they would flip it over their shoulders.

I'll wager there was enough hair floating in the air to stuff a mattress. The girls taking orders had shoulder-length hair. Our waitress had short hair.

I was under the impression waitresses were to wear nets or fasten their hair up so they didn't have to fight it. It is the law, isn't it?

Second thoughts bring forth 'no' vote on 1

I have been rethinking the Proposition 1 issue. In my opinion, Christian alliance and gay-rights agendas are equally damaging to society's peace of mind and soul.

Both groups are judgmental, self-righteous and narrow-minded. Both groups are unjust and unrealistic in their moral values and belief systems. Both extremes cause social decay.

I still say vote No On One. Can you just imagine if this thing would pass how much emotional turmoil and wasted time it will cost the state of Idaho and its citizens? It is a negative use of our human resources.

The focus of Idaho's money, time and energy needs to be used for positive goals and personal growth. Democratic equality and collective individualism (self-empowerment) is the solution to society's domestic problems.

Morals and conduct can never be successfully legislated; they must come from within each person (self-empowerment). It is our duty as our child's first teacher to teach that child how to think, reason and take responsibility for their own actions. It is our responsibility as a parent to see that this duty is carried out in a reasonable and responsible way.

Educated voting should lead to choosing Fox

This election, voters can effect the direction education will take in Idaho. There are many differences in the two candidates' approaches to solving the problems in our schools.

If you believe that our schools are best controlled by parents and the elected school board as our Constitution does, then Anne Fox is your candidate.

If you want to follow the example of California, Oregon and many other states by signing up for the federal government programs of Goals 2000 and educate America so they can control our schools, then Mr. Sullivan should get your vote.

If you want more emphasis on academics and believe phonies has a place in the classroom, then Anne Fox should be your choice.

If you want emphasis on group learning, group grading, one-world government, multiculturalism (all value systems are equally valid), then Mr. Sullivan is your candidate.

If you believe that true self-esteem comes from real accomplishment instead of making our kids feel good about mediocrity and more order is needed in the classroom, then vote for Anne Fox.

If you want to provide legislative support to Anne Fox, I would encourage you to vote for Jon Mellen and John Koning. Both of these candidates have stated their opposition to Goals 2000 and the creation of another giant federal bureaucracy.

Our children deserve the best. I would encourage all parents and taxpayers to become involved in our children's education. Do not leave these decisions to someone else. Please become informed and vote.

Reserve quarterback nets NFL's player of week title

NEW YORK – Gus Frerotte's career is perfect so far. One NFL start, one win, and now, one offensive player of the week honor.

Frerotte, who led Washington to a 41-27 victory over Indianapolis, was named the NFC player of the week on Wednesday after completing 17 of 32 passes for 226 yards and two touchdowns.

Other honorees were Chris Spielman of Detroit, the NFC's defensive player; Tyrone Hughes of New Orleans, NFC special teams; Tim Brown of the Los Angeles Raiders, AFC offensive player; Pepper Johnson of Cleveland, AFC defense, and Cleveland's Eric Metcalf, AFC special teams.

While Frerotte was making his auspicious debut, Hughes was having the most spectacular day. He returned kickoffs 98 and 92 yards for touchdowns and set NFL records for kickoff return yards (304) and total return yards (347).

Metcalf, more accustomed to such things, returned a punt 73 yards for a touchdown in the Browns' 37-13 victory over Cincinnati. Johnson had 10 tackles, including one-and-a-half sacks for the Browns in that game.

Look out – NBA owners mull lockout

The Associated Press

NEW YORK – The NBA may become the third league halted by a work stoppage. Owners scheduled a lockout vote Monday if an agreement with its union isn't reached by then.

A source close to the talks said Wednesday the owners will meet in Chicago to decide on whether to trigger the first work stoppage in NBA history. The season is scheduled to begin Nov. 4.

NBA commissioner David Stern and union head Charles Grantham were unavailable for comment. However, the sides have been talking in recent days, according to several sources on both sides.

As with the baseball strike and the NHL lockout, the sticking point is the salary cap, which the NBA adopted in 1983. The league wants to close loopholes in cap rules, while the players are trying to abolish the cap through lawsuits.

Grantham denied one agent's report that a lockout was threatened as early as Monday unless the union agreed to a no-strike, no-lockout pledge and dropped its lawsuits against the NBA. Grantham said that was "inaccurate."

Another agent, also speaking on the condition of anyonymity, said he understood the sides were nearing an agreement on the pledge and a one-year extension of the agreement that expired last summer.

Buck Williams of the Portland Trail Blazers, the association's president, said Wednesday he did not know the precise nature of the discussions between Grantham and Stern.

"I'm know they were talking, but I don't know what the results were," Williams said.

"We're still hopeful we can make a deal before the season begins, but we can't comment on any negotiations," NBA deputy commissioner Russ Granik said.

The NBA has been without a collective bargaining agreement since the end of the 1993-94 season, and no formal negotiating has occurred since July 11.

Earlier this month, both sides said they would be willing to begin the season without a deal and Stern discounted talk of a lockout.

The union has filed an antitrust lawsuit against the league challenging the salary cap, the college draft and restricted free agency. The NBA won in U.S. District Court and the case awaits a decision by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Two players sued the league this week alleging it has artificially reduced this season's salary cap by a total of about $74 million.

Basketball thus far has avoided the stoppages that have beset the other three major sports. Baseball players struck Aug. 12, that sport's seventh work stoppage since 1972. NHL owners locked out players on Oct. 1, the league's second work stoppage since 1992.

Only the NFL, which has an agreement through the 2000 Super Bowl, has labor peace. But football has weathered two preseason and two regular-season strikes since 1970 and achieved an agreement only after six years of lawsuits.

"I'm now convinced this is all a conspiracy by NFL owners," cracked baseball agent Jeff Moorad, a partner of Leigh Steinberg, the NFL's top agent.

AL awards Thomas MVP for 2nd season

The Associated Press

NEW YORK – His license plates read "LNG BALL" and his company is called Big Hurt Enterprises. So much power, and yet so much patience.

At 26, Frank Thomas already has become the kind of hitter who puts up Hall of Fame numbers. And now, he's produced something that hadn't been seen in his lifetime.

Thomas

Thomas, close to a Triple Crown when the strike started, Wednesday became the first player to win the AL Most Valuable Player award in consecutive seasons since Roger Maris.

Thomas, a unanimous winner last year with the Chicago White Sox, received 24 of 28 first-place votes this year. The first baseman was the 11th overall MVP winner to repeat, and the first in the AL since Maris in 1960-61.

Thomas received four second-place votes and finished with 372 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

Ken Griffey Jr., who led the league with 40 home runs and hit .323 for Seattle, got three-place votes and had 233 points. Albert Belle, who had 36 homers, 101 RBIs and was second in batting at .357 for Cleveland, was third with 225 points. Indians teammate Kenny Lofton, who hit .349 and stole 60 bases, received the other first-place vote and was fourth with 181 points.

Comeback keeps Agassi in Stockholm

AP photo

Andre Agassi returns a shot to Nicklas Kulti of Sweden in their Stockholm Open tennis match Wednesday.

The Associated Press

STOCKHOLM, Sweden – Andre Agassi, blanked in the first set and down 2-4, 15-40 in the second, produced a great comeback Wednesday to beat Nicklas Kulti in the second round at the Stockholm Open.

The U.S. Open champion, ranked eighth in the world after winning last week's tournament in Austria, won 0-6, 7-5, 6-4.

Michael Chang, the No. 7 seed, became the highest seed to fall, losing 6-4, 6-3 to hard-hitting Swede Magnus Larsson.

"It was one of my greatest wins," said Larsson, who clinched Sweden's 3-2 victory over the United States in last month's Davis Cup semifinals.

Larsson, ranked 28th in the world, injured his right shoulder while playing an exhibition in Hong Kong last week and considered withdrawing from the Stockholm Open.

"I served really bad during warmup tonight, but I had no problem with my biggest weapon in the match," Larsson said. "And the pain was gone, which helped."

Agassi lost to Kulti in his opening match in Stockholm four years ago, the last time the American played in the Swedish capital.

Kulti, who received a wild card by the organizers, played dream tennis to shut out Agassi in the first set.

"I wasn't playing badly or stupid," Agassi said. "He just was going for winners and played some of the best tennis of his life. On fast courts sometimes it's difficult."

Kulti, ranked 89th in the world, broke Agassi to lead 3-2 in the second set and had double break point to 5-2 when the American started his great turnaround.

Agassi broke back to love in the 10th game and closed the set with another break after dictating the pace from the baseline, clinching it with a forehand into the corner.

Volleyball title quests begin

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News sports editor

A couple of Magic Valley volleyball teams will be trying to resume their dominance at the state tournaments this weekend.

Others, like Twin Falls and Wood River, will try to start winning traditions in unfamiliar territory.

"We're just happy to be here at all," said Wood River coach Reamy Goodwin, who had to watch his team knock off top-seeded Jerome twice last week to make the A-2 field.

Now that the Wolverines are in, they face the daunting task of unseating St. Maries. Since the state went to four divisions in 1981, St. Maries has won the title 11 times, including the last 10.

The other two state titles went to Preston, and Goodwin said he expects those two to battle for the top spot again this year.

For his team to fare well, Goodwin said middle blocker Morgan Hogue and Summer Williams and Summer Hanson will have to step up, he said.

Wood River opens against Bear Lake (26-14). The Bears, from Montpelier, look a lot like Jerome on film, with a big outside hitter but a fairly limited offense, Goodwin said.

Passing will be the key to his team's success or failure, Goodwin added.

The Wolverines will be joined at the College of Southern Idaho gymnasium by Twin Falls, where the Bruins will try for their first-ever A-1 volleyball title.

The Bruins lost just once during the regular season, and the team that beat them – Burley – isn't in the field.

The slate does include Hillcrest, from Idaho Falls, however. The Knights beat Twin Falls in a pre-season tournament in three games, and have lost just once all year.

First things first, however. Coach Jerry Sivulich's team must get by Bonneville first.

The Bees (18-7) tend to leave the middle open, so the Bruins will try to establish quick hits and freeze the middle blocker to get outside hitters Laura Robertson and Kendra Misbach in one-on-one situations, Sivulich said.

Twin Falls will enjoy the home-town advantage. Sivulich said having his team eating home-cooked meals and sleeping at home rather than in hotels will be a plus.

Bonneville coach Alane Stutzman picks Hillcrest as the favorite (the Bees are 0-5 against their

Bruins get last shot at football playoffs

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — "Win this one and we're in the playoffs. Bottom line," sums up Twin Falls coach Mark Schaal as he prepares his Twin Falls Bruins for the season finale against the Nampa Bulldogs.

The teams kickoff at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Bruin Stadium.

Last week it seemed the Bruins had left the playoff scene in losing to heavily-favored Capital. But Meridian, previously winless in Division I, came up with a surprise of Boise and put itself, Nampa, Twin Falls, Borah and Boise back in the "mathematically possible" business.

Nampa is a Jekyll and Hyde team, giving Highland its best game of the season at 17-14 last week. But the Bulldogs were handled by Pocatello, Capital and Centennial. Still, they've defeated Borah and Boise, two teams that beat Twin Falls.

"Nampa reminds me most of Borah," said defensive coach Jeff Kentron. "They can go from very decent to terrible. But I guess most high school teams can."

Schaal said Nampa runs traps, toss and counter a lot. They like to bootleg and sprint out on passes and usually look to 6-1, 200-pound tight end Justin Eilers.

"They like to bring him across the formation and he's a big target," Schaal said.

Brodie Graham, 5-11, 152, handles the quarterbacking and the Bulldogs have a tough inside runner in 203-pound Travis Cay. If Eilers isn't available on a pass play, Graham usually switches to wideout T.J. Luckenga, 6-3, 165, who possesses the speed and hands of a prospect.

Albert Pardo is the other wide receiver.

On defense, the Bulldogs are considered strong and like to stunt their linebackers.

"We have to win the special-teams battle," said Schaal. "We have to block better on kickoff returns than we did last week."

Schaal said the second chance is a challenge to the team.

"We're asking them to step up," he said.

"I'm told it's been 15 years since Buhl got into the playoffs. Over the last five years these players have lost a lot of games. So to be in the playoffs in our first year says a lot for the determination of the kids and puts our program at least a year or two ahead from a confidence standpoint," he said.

The key is keep it close early, Anderson said.

Jerome, Buhl enter A-2 post-season play

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

More playoffs – B2

In the first round of the Class A-2 football playoffs, two Magic Valley teams join in the assault on the fifth district.

Jerome will host Bear Lake at 1 p.m. Friday at Maury O'Rourke/Tiger Stadium while Buhl takes the long trip to meet the defending state champion Indians on Preston's home field.

The fifth district, which has the most Class A-2 schools, also will have Marsh Valley and Snake River going against sixth district teams as reduction of traveling expense is the major concern of the first round.

The fifth district teams appear to be very similar, preferring to run more than pass and playing solid defense.

Although Jerome's opponent Bear Lake is only 2-6, there is a question on the Tigers' coaching staff. "I worry about a 2-6 team that hasn't been blown out ... and has been in every game it's played," is the consensus.

Bear Lake may throw the ball more than most fifth district teams but still favor the run about 60-40. Their quarterback is a lefty and possesses good scrambling ability.

Defensive coach Elmer Musgrave said Bear Lake's offense isn't explosive but uses three backs about equally and likes to grind.

The Bears lost to highly-regarded Snake River 7-6 when a late drive failed to carry into the end zone. They lost to Star Valley, Wyo., on two punt returns.

"All their scores were like 13-7, 7-6," said assistant coach Clark Muscat.

Part of the late-game problems could be traced to the simple fact Bear Lake requires seven players to go both ways.

That game-long physical erosion could be exaggerated by Jerome's solid size advantage in the line. Bear Lake has just one lineman over 200 while Jerome runs from the 210 to 245 area in several places.

And Jerome is impressed with Bear Lake's enthusiastic defense.

"They'll hit you. They hit hard on defense," Muscat said.

At first blush, the Buhl-Preston seems a mismatch but first-year coach Eric Anderson is pleased to be in the playoffs.

Final week of football leaves few options

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

The playoff possibilities going into the final week of the Magic Valley prep football regular season for Class A-1, Division 1, and Class A-4 (11 and 8-man) have dwindled to two.

With the A-2 and A-3 classifications getting into playoff games this weekend, things now are set in 8-man football with Rockland joining Carey in the state bracketing.

Oakley will travel to Mackay where a win would put the Hornets with Murtaugh in the A-4 11-man playoffs. Burley takes the short hop to Minico with the only thing left to be decided is which will go as the No. 1 representative from this district to the A-1 Divison II play.

Nampa travels to Twin Falls Friday night with the winner probably getting a spot in the Division I brackets — although last place faces highly-regarded Capital in the opener.

Play begins tonight with Murtaugh going to Hagerman with a chance to wrap up an undefeated season. The Red Devils will remain the No. 1 seed should they lose to Hagerman, however, based on the head-to-head tie-breaker with Oakley.

Mackay welcomes Oakley with a 3-2 conference mark while Oakley is 4-1. Should the Miners win, they would claim the second berth on head-to-head basis. Oakley has lost only to Murtaugh while Mackay was dropped by Murtaugh and Raft River.

Another Magic Valley Conference game will have Raft River ending its season at Castleford.

When Rockland beat Shoshone Wednesday afternoon, it ended all possibilities in the Sawtooth Conference. Carey will enter the eight-man playoffs as the No. 1 seed even if it loses at Clark County Friday. Rockland has a lock on No. 2.

That means Camas County's game with North Gem, set for Fairfield at 4 p.m. Friday, no longer carries any playoff weight.

Had Shoshone beaten Rockland, a Camas County win could have prompted a three-way playoff.

The final eight-man game will bring Sho-Ban to Dietrich, another 4 p.m. start.

CSI routs Treasure Valley

The Times-News

ONTARIO, Ore. – The Treasure Valley Community College volleyball team had the misfortune of catching the College of Southern Idaho on a good night Wednesday.

CSI, coming off a shaky four-game win at Albertson's College earlier in the week, routed the Chukars, 15-3, 15-2, 15-10.

"We played much better tonight," Coach Ben Stroud said. "We had good passing and we played with some intensity."

The win moves the fourth-ranked Golden Eagles to 53-3 and 5-0 in the Region 18 Northern Division.

CSI takes a long rest before wrapping up the regular season in Rexburg Nov. 4. The regional tournament begins at CSI Nov. 10.

Treasure Valley played well at the beginning of the match, but quickly withered under CSI's dominant hitting.

The Eagle offense ran smoothly, and Stroud was able to use his bench liberally in the final game.

Jody Graves led CSI with just six kills.

"It really wasn't that kind of match," Stroud said. "Nobody had a whole lot of kills."

Pals Price, Norman battle for honors

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) – Two of golf's three major honors will be decided this weekend in a battle between close friends Nick Price and Greg Norman in the season-ending Tour Championship.

But, after the Vardon Trophy and the money-winning title are decided on the hills of the Olympic Club, Norman and Price will team for a series of exhibitions that promise additional millions of dollars to golf's two leading players.

The format of the exhibitions — still another in the growing series of made-for-television events — has yet to be confirmed, Norman said.

"Basically, it would involve Price and Norman playing other two-man teams from around the world with a $1 million, winner-take-all purse.

"It might be best ball or scramble or whatever, best two out of three wins," Norman said.

Possible opponents, Norman said, include Ernie Els and David Frost of South Africa, Seve Ballesteros and Jose Maria Olazabal of Spain, Nick Faldo and Colin Montgomerie of England.

"Nick and I are Nos. 1 and 2 (in the world rankings) so we will basically challenge the world," Norman said.

He said sponsors and television contracts have been worked out and will be announced later. The series is expected to begin as early as February.

First, however, there is the matter of wrapping up this season in a $3 million tournament that has a field of the year's top 30 money-winners.

As usual, Price and Norman are the central figures.

"Nick and Greg are just on a level a little above the rest of us," Fred Couples said.

"If this were the Phoenix Open, with a 154-man field, they'd be favored," Couples said.

"In a 30 man field, even if it's the best 30, they're favored even more. The smaller the field is, the better chance the best players have or winning," Norman's principal goal is securing the Vardon Trophy, for the low adjusted scoring average, that he let slip through his fingers last year because of a scheduling mistake.

Late in the season, too late to correct, Norman discovered he did not have the minimum number of rounds necessary to be eligible for the Vardon. He led the scoring average at 68.90, but Price won the trophy at 69.11.

This year, Norman comes into the last official event with an all but insurmountable lead, 68.68 to Price's 69.23. And, at the end of this event, he will have the necessary 60 rounds of competition.

Price, winner of the British Open, the PGA and four other tournaments, already has clinched the PGA Player of the Year award, but the money-winning title remains very much in doubt.

Rockland throws Shoshone out of playoffs

The Times-News

SHOSHONE – A safety in the fourth quarter turned the tide for Rockland, as the Bulldogs ended Shoshone's season, 30-20, Wednesday afternoon.

The win makes Rockland, 7-1, the No. 2 playoff seed from the Sawtooth Conference behind Carey. Shoshone drops to 5-3 and will not make the playoffs.

The result also means Camas County, with two losses, will not survive into post-season play.

With the score tied 14-all after three quarters, Shoshone coach Tim Chapman said his team "kinda fell apart" in the fourth.

A high snap on a fourth-down punting play gave Rockland a safety, the lead and momentum.

On the ensuing drive, Bulldog runner Steve May went in from 15 yards out. The two-point conversion made the score 24-14.

"May had a couple of nice runs," Chapman said. "I think everyone on our team had a hand on him at one time, but we couldn't bring him down."

May's 51-yarder later in the fourth slammed the door on Shoshone.

A 20-yard scamper by Indian quarterback Dany Higley drew the score to 30-20, but an on-side kick failed, and Rockland ran out the clock.

It was May doing most of the running in the first half as well, getting Rockland even in with a 48-yard run. After Shoshone's second score, it was May again, turning a short pass into an 83-yard touchdown.

Rockland, ranked No. 5 in this week's statewide poll, will open the playoffs next week, possibly against third-ranked Notus.

Baseball players warn strikebreakers: Don't show up

NEW YORK (AP) — Striking members of the New York Mets and Yankees had a warning for any potential strikebreakers at spring training next year: Do so at your own peril.

"I'm sitting out, I'm losing a ton of money, so if you cross the line, it might be a tough go for you," pitcher John Franco, a Mets player rep, said Tuesday.

Asked if that meant knockdown pitches, Franco replied, "I don't throw balls. I throw fists."

Some owners have said they may open camps for spring training and invite minor leaguers and any roster players who want to break ranks.

"There's a price to pay if that happens," Bobby Bonilla, the other Mets player rep, told The Record of Hackensack, N.J. "Our negotiations are not any different than any negotiations in a labor situation. Try to cross a Teamsters line, and you'd end up in the East River."

Mets catcher Todd Hundley said strikebreakers "would be marked guys. Those guys will have a big bullseye on their back."

The players, at a news conference promoting a charity bowling event sponsored by Bonilla, noted the day will come when the strike ends and the chance for retribution begins. He said a strikebreaker would be at risk then.

"I might have even have orders from somebody to throw at him, and I'm sure if the situation ends up getting that bad, it will happen," Yankees pitcher Scott Kamieniecki told The New York Times. "We just have to do what we think is right here, and if it comes to that, I wouldn't hesitate."

Mediator listens to union

NEW YORK (AP) — Mediator W.J. Usery began his baseball education Wednesday when he spent the day listening to the union give its view of the sport's labor history.

"We had what I hope was an informative session with the mediator," said Eugene Orza, the union's No. 2 official. "It's in the nature of the process not to discuss what was discussed so I won't."

Milwaukee pitcher Bob Scanlan was the only player at the session.

Usery is scheduled to return to the union's office Thursday.

Usery, appointed by the Clinton adminstration on Oct. 14, also plans to meet separately with the owners and their representatives. But he hasn't scheduled those meetings yet, Orza said.

The strike, which began Aug. 12, completes its 11th week Thursday and has caused the most uncertain offseason since the free-agent era began after the 1976 season.

Free agents can start signing on Sunday, but many agents say they expect the market to develop late because of strike.

Nine more players filed Wednesday, raising the total to 120 plus the 11 rejected by owners.

The dispute group, all of whom need the 52 days of the strike for the required six years of service time, includes pitchers Jack McDowell, Jim Abbott and Kenny Rogers.

Filing Friday were Chicago White Sox outfielder Dan Pasqua, Cleveland pitcher Jeff Russell, Oakland pitchers Bob Welch and Bobby Witt, Chicago Cubs pitcher Chuck Crim, Houston outfielders Kevin Bass and Milt Thompson, Philadelphia first baseman John Kruk and San Diego pitcher Bill Krueger.

Fifteen more players are eligible to file by Saturday's deadline. Among those, Boston catcher Damon Berryhill, Kansas City third baseman Gary Gaetti, Texas pitcher Tom Henke and Rangers shortstop Manuel Lee all await decisions on club options for 1995.

cross-town rivals), but said she worries about Twin Falls' size.

With a couple of 6-footers in Meghan Trainor and Emily Maughan, the Bruins have one of the taller teams in the field.

Class A-3

Defending state champion Filer won't be back, but Gooding and Kimberly hope to keep the title in the Canyon Conference.

Top-seeded Gooding (12-5 regular season) opens against the Melba Mustangs (11-1).

Mustang coach Dave Mangum said his team can match the Senators physically, but must run its offense quickly to overcome Gooding's strong defense.

The two teams met in tournament play early in the season, with Gooding winning decisively.

"They flat out-defensed us," Mangum said.

For Gooding, it will be a chance to regain the title held by the Senators for two years until Filer won it last year.

"Gooding has a tremendous volleyball tradition," Mangum said. "That's a real plus."

Gooding has worn the state crown five times since 1979.

That's five more than Kimberly, which had to beat Challis in a playoff to make the eight-team field.

In Clearwater Valley, the Lady Dawgs face a team that went 13-1 in the regular season.

The teams appear closely matched as far as height goes, with Kimberly having a slight edge in experience. Kimberly enters the tournament with an 8-5 regular-season mark, but two of those losses came to A-1 Twin Falls and Minico.

Class A-4

The Shoshone Indians have built a volleyball dynasty in District 4, going to the state tournament 11 years running.

But state titles are more difficult to come by than the local variety. Shoshone won its first state title in 1990, then picked up a second last year.

With five starters from that team returning, coach Larry Messick knows he has the firepower to keep the trophy in Shoshone.

"We just worry about ourselves, and we'll be OK," Messick said.

His team will first battle North Gem's Cowboys, which brings only one senior and a 16-9 record to the tournament.

"They were a pretty respectable team last year" at state, Messick recalls.

His team, 27-1, will be challenged by Cambridge and Nampa Christian. Those teams were the stiffest tests for the Indians in last year's title march, and Cambridge has state titles from 1982, 1988, 1991 and 1992.

The other local A-4 team, Hagerman, has a couple of state championships, the most recent coming in 1981.

Coach Susie Choules' Pirates drew dark horse Falls Christian out of the blocks.

Choules said she doesn't know much about the Eagles, except they they tip a lot and hit to the middle.

Falls Christian was 5-7 during the season and seeded fourth in the District 1 tournament. But the Eagles knocked off top seed Clark Fork early, then beat Kootenai twice to gain a state berth.

The trip to state is the first for Falls Christian in any sport.

"In games we've been able to stay close, we seem to get a little stronger right along whether we win it or not," he said. "But if we get down early, like 14 points, we just seem to lose the will to resist."

"Our goal is to be competitive," he continued. "Although Preston is the defending state champion we watched them against Marsh Valley and Marsh Valley had a chance to win it late. We played Marsh Valley pretty tough so going on that, we think we can be competitive against Preston, too."

Preston is a running team and puts just about everything on fullback dive or option pitches.

"They would much rather run that throw from what we've seen," Anderson said. "They have a good running back who likes to cut back so we're working against that this week. And they have a dang good tight end. We have to jam him on every play."

"Almost all the fifth district teams play a 50 front so the quarterback expects that end to be in his face in two steps and force him to pitch. We use a 50 front and hope we can contain them."

Anderson said Buhl may be a little bigger than Bear Lake, but the Bears appear to have an edge on team quickness.

Colorado diversity may give edge over Huskers

By Rick Warner
The Associated Press

Remember when Nebraska-Oklahoma was always the Big Eight game of the year, the one that decided the Orange Bowl berth and had a major impact on the national championship?

Now it's Nebraska-Colorado.

The last five times they've played, the outcome has determined the Big Eight champion. Saturday's game in Lincoln between the second-ranked Buffaloes (7-0) and No. 3 Cornhuskers (8-0) also may determine the national champion.

The winner could replace Penn State as the nation's No. 1 team.

"If the winner plays a great game, I think they will," Colorado coach Bill McCartney said.

Two of the country's best running backs — Colorado's Rashaan Salaam and Nebraska's Lawrence Phillips — will be challenged by outstanding run defenses.

Salaam, who leads the NCAA in rushing with a 179-yard average, will face a Nebraska defense that is giving up only 61 yards per game on the ground. Phillips, third nationally with a 154-yard average, goes against a Colorado unit that is allowing 99 rushing yards per game.

While Nebraska sticks almost exclusively to the ground, Colorado has a diversified attack. Buffaloes quarterback Kordell Stewart can run the option or pass to top targets Michael Westbrook and Christian Fauria.

Nebraska QB Brook Berringer, who became the starter after Tommie Frazier was sidelined with a blood clot, appears recovered from a partially collapsed lung. But the Cornhuskers have no reliable backups and will be in big trouble if Berringer gets hurt.

The game is considered a tossup by oddsmakers, but give the Buffaloes a slight edge because of their versatility ... COLORADO 17-14.

Wacky WAC takes defensive stance

The Sporting News

For one half Saturday, the two best teams in the Western Athletic Conference seemed to prove that Rocky Mountain football had changed. The most ballyhooed game in conference history featuring unbeaten Colorado State against unbeaten Utah, reached intermission with the Utes ahead, 9-7. That's a scoreboard that would have made Woody Hayes squint in appreciation.

Then came the second half. Like two addicts pulled back into the abyss, the Rams and Utes degenerated into the wild, orgiastic football that for years made purists turn their heads in disgust.

Boy, was it fun.

Colorado State, trailing, 38-31, came within 10 yards of the Utah end zone in the final minute. On fourth down, Utes free safety Harold Lusk returned an interception of Anthoney Hill's pass into the end zone 100 yards to seal Utah's 45-31 victory. The record crowd of 39,107 in Hughes Stadium went so quietly you could hear a ranking drop.

For seven weeks, the WAC had shown inclinations of joining the rest of college football in acknowledging the importance of defense. The changeover had put the league in the delightful position of deciding which upset would do more for the WAC's reputation: Colorado State at Arizona or Brigham Young at Notre Dame. The victories seemed to achieve what BYU's national championship a decade ago did not: a new sense of respect for the WAC.

"Like I've been saying for years," BYU coach LaVell Edwards says, "we have to win big games."

The WAC is 19-10 against non-conference competition. It is 6-2 vs. the Pacific 10 Conference. Hawaii is 2-0 against the Pac-10 and 0-5 in the WAC. Oregon is 3-1 in the Pac-10 and 0-2 against the WAC.

"I've seen this coming for two or three years," Air Force Coach Fisher DeBerry said before the Falcons stunned Fresno State, 42-7, for their fourth consecutive victory, "and I've said that. The football in this conference doesn't have to take a back seat anywhere. Everybody recognized the need to put good players on defense and that you win championships with defense."

For decades, the WAC has been known for offense. The quarterback honor roll affords easily recognizable names: Danny White, Marc Wilson, Jim McMahon, Steve Young, Ty Detmer, Dan McGwire and Trent Dilfer.

But producing quarterbacks and producing victories are two different issues. The WAC seemed almost exotic in the way its teams pursued offense at the expense of defense. A 1991 BYU-San Diego State game served as the signature for the league. The Cougars came back with a flurry of fourth-quarter points to tie San Diego State, 52-52.

Earlier this season, BYU held Notre Dame to 115 yards rushing and even gained 104 itself. The Cougars also held the Irish to two touchdowns, winning by the sickly score of 21-14.

Enter last week, when the Rams and the Utes met in a game that attracted national attention. Utah ranked in the top 10 in Division I-A in three offensive categories. More important, it ranked in the top 10 in five defensive categories.

"The hardest players to recruit are defensive linemen," Utah Coach Ron McBride says. "They are very difficult to find and very difficult to get. ... We were fortunate to get an Elliss."

Luther Elliss is a 6-foot-6, 288-pound senior defensive tackle for the Utes. He bench-presses 475 pounds and has a vertical jump of 31½ inches. Elliss is typical of the WAC in a number of ways in that not even McBride knew what he had.

The timing of this WAC resurgence couldn't have been better. The conference is expanding from 10 to 16 teams in two years. Texas Christian, Southern Methodist, Rice, Nevada-Las Vegas, Tulsa and San Jose State will join the WAC. The current members are eager for their future colleagues to arrive. All of which made Utah-Colorado State somewhat of a disappointment, albeit an entertaining one.

Bills use week to ponder loss, prepare for Chiefs

By Dave Goldberg
The Associated Press

The Buffalo Bills have had a week off to think about losing at home to Indianapolis and what might happen if they fail again this week against a much better Kansas City team.

"I still think we're one of the top teams in the AFC and I think everybody in the league knows that," says center Kent Hull. "But I think it's up to the people in this locker room to show up and play like that. And we haven't done that in some instances."

Neither has Kansas City, which comes into Rich Stadium, where it lost 30-13 in last year's AFC title game, at 5-2 to Buffalo's 4-3. Each is a game behind the division leader — San Diego in the AFC West and Miami in the AFC East.

NFL preview

But the Bills may need this more in their quest to do the unheard of — get back to the Super Bowl for a fifth straight shot at their first NFL title. The last time Buffalo was .500 or below at the midway point of a non-strike season was 1986, and they finished 4-12 that year.

The Chiefs have been the ultimate schizophrenic team.

After losing two straight without scoring a touchdown, they've scored eight in wins over Denver and Seattle. Joe Montana has revived and so has the running game — the venerable Marcus Allen and the ultra-green Greg Hill combined for 151 yards against the Seahawks last week.

Buffalo's problem, if that's what it is, has been an ultra-green secondary and a down year by Jim Kelly, who is third from the bottom in AFC quarterback ratings. Kelly will probably get better but Montana has been known to deal cruelly with green secondaries.

Still, how crucial is this?

"It's tough every year in the NFL," says coach Marv Levy. "We had a streak where we lost three out of four last year. Every season is a struggle."

In other games Sunday, Dallas is at Cincinnati; Detroit is at the New York Giants; Philadelphia is at Washington; Miami is at New England; Cleveland is at Denver; Houston is at the Los Angeles Raiders; Minnesota is at Tampa Bay; the New York Jets are at Indianapolis; Seattle is at San Diego, and Pittsburgh is at Arizona. Green Bay is at Chicago Monday night. The NFC West is off.

Miami (5-2) at New England (3-4)

All you have to know about this game is that NBC switched it to 4 p.m. EDT so it could televise it nationally. That's because on opening week, Dan Marino and Drew Bledsoe threw for 894 yards between them and Miami won, 39-35.

So this is liable to extend into prime time unless Bill Parcells gets the running game going. He needs it. The Pats have lost two straight and have proven themselves to be just what Parcells said they'd be: a young team that's still in the early building stages.

"It tends to hit you a little bit harder after you've had some success," Bledsoe says of the fall under .500. "We're to the point now where we expect to be able to win ball games."

The Dolphins, after a loss in Buffalo and an overtime win at home over the Raiders, suddenly find themselves back in control of the AFC East. But before their bye last week, the offense was sputtering, with just three touchdowns in nine quarters.

Still, Marino gives them confidence and they seem to be able to find replacements for injured parts — moving Bryan Cox to the middle for Dwight Hollier or plugging in Bernie and Irving (Parmalee and Spikes) for Terry Kirby.

• • •

Green Bay (3-4) at Chicago (4-3) Monday night

These two teams will be wearing their throwback uniforms for the 147th renewal of the NFL's oldest rivalry. It's also a desperation game for the Packers, who were at least co-favorites to win the NFC Central. Another loss, particularly to a division rival, puts them in deep trouble.

Green Bay's problem has been offense. Brett Favre remains inconsistent and the running game nonexistent (26th in the league), leaving opponents to blanket Sterling Sharpe.

Chicago continues with Erik Kramer at quarterback, although he is 1-2 as a starter to 3-0 for Steve Walsh. They may get some incentive when the Bears finally retire the numbers of Gale Sayers and Dick Butkus.

• • •

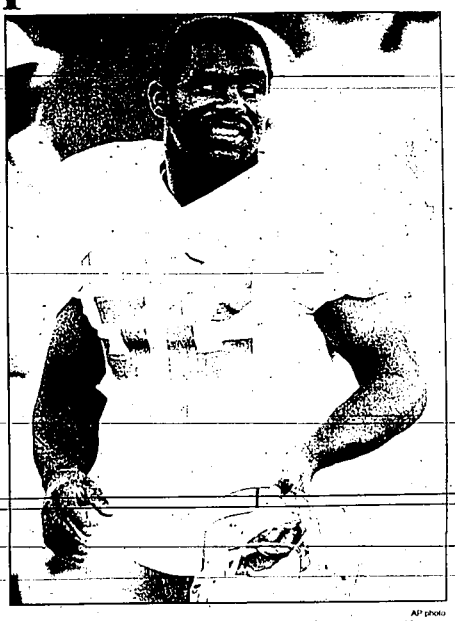

Cleveland (6-1) at Denver (2-5)

This is a dangerous game for the Browns.

To put it one way, Denver is the toughest 2-5 team they'll play this season. To put it another, the combined record of the teams the Browns have beaten is 10-26.

Denver also has won 14 of the last 16 meetings and seven of the last eight at Mile High Stadium, including two AFC title games. And the Broncos' last two games are more like what they were supposed to be: the win in San Diego and the John Elway-Joe Montana shootout that went to the Chiefs because they had the ball last.

Vinny Testaverde was the victim of Dan Wilkinson's first sack last week and had to leave the game with a concussion. He'll probably be back, but if not, Mark Rypien's a sufficient backup.

AP photo

Miami Dolphins' running back Cleveland Gary stops for a breather during practice in Davie, Fla., Wednesday. Gary will make his debut as a Dolphin against the New England Patriots this weekend.

• • •

Dallas (6-1) at Cincinnati (0-7)

If the Cowboys think they have problems, they ought to ask Dave Shula.

Not only is his team 0-7 after losing 37-13 in Cleveland, but he's down to his third-string quarterback. Jeff Blake, who will probably make his first NFL start.

Troy Aikman's concussion could keep him out, and why not? Rodney Peete can certainly handle the Bengals. The bigger long-term concern is the loss of right tackle Erik Williams, injured in an auto accident early Monday after the trip back from Arizona.

But Aikman says: "I'm playing Sunday even if I have five high school players as offensive linemen."

As for Cincinnati, Shula says: "We thought we were rock bottom before. Now we'll really see."

• • •

Pittsburgh (5-2) at Arizona (2-5)

This is a "duck" game, as in, "Duck Neil!" "Duck Steve!" (or Jim or Jay)." That's because these are the two blitzingest teams in the league, as likely to score on defense as on offense.

The Steelers have found a suitable replacement for the injured Barry Foster, who ran for 146 yards against the Giants last week. Credit Bill Cowher with giving him the chance by leaving him in the game after he lost two fumbles early.

Not only is "Buddy Ball" a disappointment in the desert, but "Buddy Bluster" is missing. Buddy Ryan is actually starting to blame himself for the failings of his team.

Team Turmoil at Team Turmoil.

The only positive thing about the Oilers that instead of blaming each other for their problems, they're blaming themselves. Gary Brown, Cris Dishman and Marcus Robertson all said "mea culpa" after the loss in Philadelphia Monday night and even Billy Joe Tolliver got in the act, blaming himself for a bad toss on one of Brown's three fumbles.

The Raiders, meanwhile, have spent the week embroiled in the Art Shell-Jeff Hostetler controversy. So "What did Art say and who heard it?" has become a more important issue than the fact that Harvey Williams (for a week at least) has finally given the Raiders the semblance of a running game.

Philadelphia (5-2) at Washington (2-6)

Gus Frerotte is likely to find his second game a lot tougher than his first, even though it will be before the home folks.

For one thing, there's the Eagle defense, which will pressure him more than Indianapolis did. For another, there's the fact that the Eagles have a Frerotte tape to look at, and the Colts didn't.

The Eagles also have their unsung hero. His name is Herschel Walker, who has gone from superstar to grunt and become more productive in the process. Now he blocks, catches, runs down on special teams and occasionally runs with the ball.

• • •

Seattle (3-4) at San Diego (6-1)

The Chargers were due to lose. That's probably as much a reason as any that they were beaten by the Broncos last week.

"You can't be perfect all the time," says Stan Humphries, who had three interceptions in the loss to the Broncos after throwing only two in the six wins.

Seattle, which lost to the Chargers 24-10 after starting 2-0, is probably due for a win after three straight losses. But that may also be the Seahawks finding their level. They're improving, but not yet at a playoff pace.

• • •

Detroit (3-4) at New York Giants (3-4)

The Lions broke a three-game losing streak last week, and now run into a team that's lost four straight after three wins to open the season.

Dave Brown continues to be the quarterback for the Giants after throwing nine interceptions in the four losses because Dan Reeves believes it's not all his fault. But Reeves has the hook ready. Kent Graham got a lot more snaps in practice this week.

Scott Mitchell isn't exactly tearing it up for the Lions — six of 17 for 59 yards last week while Barry Sanders and Mel Gray got the yardage against the Bears.

• • •

Minnesota (5-2) at Tampa Bay (2-5)

This could be an ambush for the Vikings: their last warm weather start against a losing team was a 17-7 loss in Arizona. On the other hand, they've had 10 days to think about it since going to overtime against Green Bay.

Still, it's hard to imagine Minnesota losing against those same old Bucs, who seem headed for their 12th straight season of double-digit losses. Craig Erickson revolves back into the quarterback start after Trent Dilfer was blown away in San Francisco.

• • •

New York Jets (4-3) at Indianapolis (3-5)

Believe it or not, there was a touchdown scored in the first meeting — a 16-6 win by the Jets — but it didn't come until there was 2:26 left. Otherwise, these guys play them 9-6 and 6-3.

Don Majkowski gets the start at quarterback in this one in place of Jim Harbaugh, who remains the second-highest rated quarterback in the AFC, despite two interceptions in last week's loss to Washington. Panic time?

Rural towns love their 8-man games

ALTOONA, Kan. (AP) — It hasn't been a very good year for the Jets, and Katherine Relph thinks she could have brought her two football-playing grandsons better luck by staying home.

The Fredonia woman missed her first game of the season the week before — the same night Altoona-Midway High School finally won.

"I debated about coming tonight," she says, "but my son said, 'Come on, you need to go to the game.'"

The Jets play eight-man football in the Mineral Belt League of rural southeast Kansas. It's a fast game, played on an 80-yard by 40-yard field, with lots of big plays and lots of points on the board.

The Jets' record was only 1-6 coming into tonight's game against the Oswego Indians, but that victory was a big one. It came in the first of three district playoff games from which one team will advance to the state playoffs.

The night Mrs. Relph stayed home, the winless Jets trailed Elk Valley by 20 points in the first quarter before coming back to tie and then win in overtime.

Mrs. Relph, 67, a retired school nurse who used to divide her workday between what were then separate high schools at Altoona and Midway, enjoys sitting in her son's pickup truck along the north end zone, watching grandsons David and Joe play.

David, a 194-pound junior lineman, is the only Jets player who runs the 40-yard dash in under five seconds. Joe is a 120-pound freshman who also plays on the line and figures to get some playing time.

The Jets started the season with 22 players but now are down to 16, three of whom are injured, including the starting quarterback and tailback.

Tonight's game is a big one because the Jets still can salvage something from an otherwise disappointing season — the district title and a chance to keep playing.

Altoona-Midway is a consolidated high school with 122 students in four grades, about two-thirds of them from farms or rural homes. The high school is located about 10 miles north of Altoona, population 564, and five miles south of Buffalo, population 386.

It's a place where, as football coach Eric Larsen says, "I don't have to wear a bulletproof vest."

And it's a place where people turn out to support their team, even in a down year.

Tonight, as the Jets take on the 2-5 Oswego Indians, about 200 people are in the home stands, and more watch from cars and pickups ringing the field.

"Midway has a pretty good following as a rule," says Mike Olson, 40, who farms near the high school and whose son is on the team. "People keep coming to games after their kids are grown."

Even Mason Sewell, 75, who lives in a small house just past the north end zone, comes out on his front porch in his pajamas to watch the game for a while.

"I know most of the boys," he says. "They practice out here quite a bit. They've got a nice field, and the boys keep it up in good shape."

Altoona-Midway has had some pretty good teams in recent years, as plaques in the school lobby attest. The Jets were district champions in 1990 and 1991, and made it to the Eight-Man Division I state semifinals in 1992.

They won the league title twice in those three years but had a losing season last year, like this year.

Larsen, a biology teacher who came to Altoona-Midway six years ago from Iowa, has been coach through those good and bad years.

"The first eight-man game I ever saw was the first one I coached," says Larsen, 54.

The 10-mile bus ride from the high school to the football field in Altoona is a quiet one for players — past the High Prairie Cemetery; past farms with piled mounds of stones dredged from fields; past Paradise Quail Hunting, "guided hunts, dogs available."

Then a right into Altoona, bypassing the main road to Independence and points south.

Tonight's game doesn't start out well, as the Jets lose 15 yards on their first play from scrimmage and then throw an interception on the next play.

Oswego runs the I-formation, and the Jets hold the Indians for three downs before their quarterback scores on a fake sweep left and bootleg right — a well-executed play but one coach Larsen had prepared his team for.

The Jets come back to tie the score on a 50-yard pass. They trail 14-12 at halftime but open the third quarter with a long scoring drive, mostly on runs or pass receptions by tailback Justin Costin, and go ahead 20-14.

Oswego scores on a long drive to go up 22-20 at the end of the third quarter. That's followed by another Oswego drive and score for a 30-20 lead.

"They've lost too many ball players," says Dale Shepard, 69, a retired railroad worker from Chanute, wearing a blue "A-M" hat and standing outside his pick-up along the field. "That really hurt us."

Altoona-Midway's last drive comes up short as the Jets turn the ball over on downs with 1:20 left. The Jets pack the defensive line to try to stop Oswego, moving out of their usual formation of three linemen, three linebackers and two defensive backs.

On the first play, the Oswego runner gets through the line and finds 60 yards of open field ahead of him, going all the way for a touchdown to make the score 38-20 with 1:02 left.

The game looks to be all but over for Altoona-Midway. Still, the stands don't empty until the horn on the scoreboard sounds.

The players line up to shake hands, and both teams file onto their buses for the trip back to their schools.

The Altoona band packs up its equipment in the back of a Ford van; the announcer and statisticians climb down from the "crow's nest" overlooking the field and haul away the aluminum ladder they used to get there; and principal Frank Kennedy collects the sideline yard markers and other equipment from the field.

There'll be no second season for the Jets this year. They're now 1-1 in district play, 1-7 overall, with a road game against the district's strongest team, Chetopa, still to come.

Within 15 minutes, the field is largely deserted as Kennedy completes his post-game chores.

The eight banks of lights around the field go out. The scoreboard stays on, still showing the final score under a full October moon.

'Midway has a pretty good following as a rule. People keep coming to games after their kids are grown.'

— Mike Olson, father of a Midway Jets football player

Differences between 8-man, 11-man football rules

Key differences between eight-man and 11-man football.

- Played on a shorter and narrower field, 80 yards long by 40 yards wide, compared with 100 yards by 53 1-3 yards. (Idaho schools play eight-man ball on a regular 100-yard field.)
- Five players must be on the line of scrimmage. Any player on the end of the line, including the center, is an eligible receiver. All three backs are eligible receivers.
- Kickoffs spotted at the 30-yard line. If a kickoff goes into the end zone, it's brought out to the 15-yard line for play.
- Any numbered jersey may be worn by any player, regardless of position. There is no number requirement as in 11-man football.
- In Kansas, the 45-point rule is in effect. The game ends anytime after halftime when one team leads by 45 points or more.
- The key to eight-man football is speed, says Altoona-Midway coach Eric Larsen. "Teams I've had that were successful were real fast. This is no game for a kid who can't move. In 11-man you can put a big, slow player in the line and tell him to plug a hole; not in eight-man."

Twelve states, all west of the Mississippi River, play eight-man football, according to the National Federation of State High School Associations in Kansas City.

Aging Holmes, Foreman plan returns to ring

NEW YORK (AP) — Larry Holmes, who turns 45 in a week, will challenge WBC heavyweight champion Oliver McCall on Jan. 21.

"I deserve this opportunity because I didn't sit there and wait like George Foreman," said Holmes, the WBC or IBF heavyweight champion in 1978-85.

Foreman, who will be 46 on Jan. 10, will challenge Michael Moorer for the IBF and WBA heavyweight titles Nov. 5 at Las Vegas in what will be his first fight in 17 months.

Holmes won five fights last year and two this year, including a decision over Jesse Ferguson on Aug. 9.

"Yes, Larry signed a contract Monday, and he's got a title shot," Don King told The Associated Press by telephone from Rome, where he is attending the WBA convention. "Oliver signed Monday, too."

It will be the 29-year-old McCall's first defense of the title he won on a shocking second-round knockout of Lennox Lewis on Sept. 25 at London.

"You're ahead of me," King said when reached in his hotel suite. "I wasn't going to announce it until I got a site."

Possible sites are Las Vegas or Atlantic City, N.J.

"The money is very low — under $1 million — but that's not a real concern," Holmes said from his office at Easton, Pa.

It will be Holmes' third bid at regaining at least a piece of the championship.

He failed to regain the IBF title from Michael Spinks when he lost a split decision in 1986, then retired.

Holmes came back to challenge Mike Tyson in 1988, was stopped in the fourth round and retired again.

He started on second comeback in 1991 and has compiled a 13-1 record since. The loss was a decision to Evander Holyfield in a bid for the undisputed title June 19, 1992.

Holmes' return to a championship fight renews his love-hate relationship with King.

"Don has't been as bad as some of them guys out there," Holmes said.

From the time Holmes became champion by outpointing Ken Norton in 1978 until he lost it on points to Spinks in 1985, Holmes made 17 defenses of the WBC title, which he relinquished, and two defenses of the IBF title.

Aching back sidelines Daly

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — John Daly looked out of place, walking from hole to hole with the rest of the gallery. Instead of stepping up to unleash one of those drives that inspires "oohs" and "aahs" from the crowd, he was only here to watch others play.

Doesn't he miss it? Doesn't he feel the urge to grab a driver and punish one of those little white golf balls?

"Not really. I was glad to take a break," he said after a college tournament in Birmingham this week. "I guess if I don't miss it by December, I'll have to find another career."

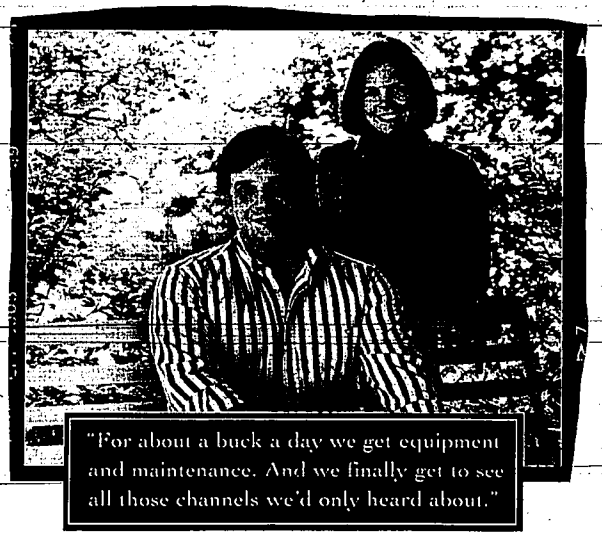

Daly insists it was his decision, and his decision only, to skip the rest of the year on the PGA Tour. His back was aching, he said, in no small part because of an alteration after his last tournament, the World Series of Golf in late July.

"I didn't give the Tour a chance to sit me down," Daly said outside the clubhouse at Shoal Creek, where he helped coach Arkansas, his alma mater, to a fifth-place finish in the 12-team Jerry Pate National Intercollegiate.

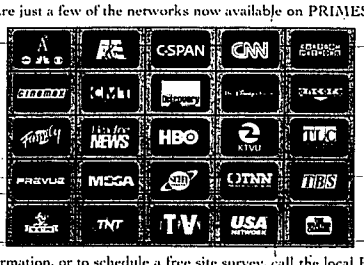

"I told Tim (PGA commissioner Finchem) that I didn't want to play anymore this year. Tim thought it was a good idea and the smart thing to do."

The personable Daly has been enormously popular with golf fans ever since his stunning victory at the 1991 PGA Championship, where his booming drives became the stuff of legend. Since then, though, his stormy personal life has overshadowed his talent on the course.

He has been suspended twice, once to undergo alcohol rehabilitation treatment, and may have been facing further sanctions after his last start in July, when he was accused of repeatedly hitting into the group ahead of him and eventually got in a public scuffle with the father of national club pro champion Jeff Roth.

Jerome man injured after truck rolls over

TWIN FALLS – A 19-year-old Jerome man suffered minor injuries Wednesday after the small pick-up he was driving rolled over once off U.S. Highway 93 north of the Perrine Bridge, said Idaho State Police Cpl. Steve Walker.

Troy Harpel was traveling south on U.S. Highway 93 at about 6 p.m. when he went off the right side of the road, corrected back onto the pavement and then slid back off the right side, Walker said. Harpel was taken to Magic Valley Regional Medical Cehter, he said.

Brothers await preliminary hearing on cocaine charges

TWIN FALLS – A pair of brothers were arraigned in Magistrate Court Wednesday on charges of possession of cocaine with intent to deliver.

Ignacio Xavier Silva, 36, and Hector Jaime Silva, 29, were arrested Tuesday evening after a search of their room at the Branding Iron Motel, at 450 Addison Ave. W.

Law enforcement officers found 19.2 grams of cocaine, several hypodermic syringes, and three firearms – including a .357-caliber Magnum pistol and a 12-gauge sawed-off shotgun.

Public defenders have been appointed to represent the Silvas and a preliminary hearing has been set for Nov. 4. Bond for the elder Silva was set at $25,000, while Hector Silva was held on a $10,000 bond.

No on One representatives schedule forum tonight

TWIN FALLS – Representatives of the No on One Coalition will be in town this evening for a forum on the Idaho Citizens Alliance's anti-gay-rights ballot measure.

Brian Bergquist, chairman of the Coalition, and others will appear at the Obenchain Community Room at 264 Main Avenue South in Twin Falls from 7 to 9 p.m. No on One Coalition spokesman Ryan Hill describes the forum as a chance for people with questions about the initiative to voice them. Similar forums have been held this week in Pocatello and Idaho Falls.

Register to vote by Friday to avoid wait on election day

TWIN FALLS – Idaho residents have until Friday night to register before the Nov. 8 general election, and after that, they will have to take their chances on election day lines.

Under a new law, Idaho will allow election-day registration for the first time. But Secretary of State Pete Cenarrusa said Wednesday if people want to avoid delays, they should register beforehand.

People can register with county clerks until the close of business on Friday. As has been the practice in recent years, clerks plan to remain open until 8 p.m.

Those who register election day will have to get into separate lines and prove they are valid Idaho residents, Cenarrusa said.

Friday also is the deadline for people to file as write-in candidates.

Cable TV will broadcast 3 candidates for state offices

TWIN FALLS – Three candidates for statewide office will appear on cable television tonight.

Republican superintendent of public instruction candidate Anne Fox, Democratic lieutenant governor candidate John Peavey, and secretary of state candidate Edith Stanger, also a Democrat, will appear on a program sponsored by the Twin Falls Chamber of Commerce and King Videocable. The broadcast, on cable channel 10, runs from 7 p.m. until 9 p.m.

Potato Promotion board will choose member from area

MURTAUGH – The National Potato Promotion board will meet to select one member from this area to serve on the board effective March 1995.

The term is three years. All potato growers who produce 5 acres or more are eligible to serve. Nominations can be made from the floor. The Potato Board strongly encourages growers who are women, minorities or persons with disabilities to actively seek nomination to the board.

Tracy Stanger of Murtaugh is presently serving and his term will expire in 1995. Stanger is eligible to serve a second three-year term.

The meeting will be at 3 p.m. today at the Country Cafe in Murtaugh.

Mental-health problems on the rise

By Julie M. McKinnon
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – The number of "protective holds" on people in suspected psychiatric emergencies, where people could hurt themselves or others, has risen by 362 percent since 1992 in Twin Falls County.

Those dealing with psychiatric emergencies such as suicides and homicides are seeing more mental crises as the area's population grows, said Lt. Dan Hall of the Twin Falls County Sheriff's Department.

"We've got a lot of future changes ahead of us," Hall said. "We're a growing area. You're going to have growing problems."

So far this year, there have been 60 protective holds issued, said Robin Saldivia of the Twin Falls County Prosecutor's Office. Thirteen protective holds were issued in Twin Falls County in 1992, and 23 were issued last year.

Saldivia and Hall were two of six panelists Wednesday who talked with about 30 professionals from throughout the Magic Valley about techniques and standard procedures used with people experiencing extreme crises.

There was a time when law enforcement officials would avoid dealing with people having mental problems or, if they were from out of the county, drop them off in another jurisdiction, Hall said. That has changed in Twin Falls County the past few years, especially since professionals are working together and mentally ill people can get help locally, he said.

Dr. Richard Worst of Canyon View Hospital & Counseling Centers said he thinks it's rare for someone to have substance-abuse problems without also having psychiatric problems. A suicidal person with chronic depression may use alcohol or drugs – and make their depression worse, he said.

Idaho law, however, states that a person has to be mentally ill to be committed for suicidal or homicidal tendencies, said Scott Williams, a designated examiner with Mental Health Services for the region.

That means a drunken person threatening to jump from a bridge could not be involuntarily committed unless professionals also can show the person is mentally ill, Williams said.

Once a protective hold is issued, Saldivia said she has 24 hours to arrange for the person's first evaluation and file an application with the court to set a hearing within five days. The paralegal said she needs to talk with all professionals involved to find out the person's situation and background.

Hall said it's important for law enforcement officials to get a detailed report about what happened, and they should talk with all involved to get information about past actions.

There are times when issuing a protective hold is the only way to get a mentally ill person into the mental-health system for help, he said. Protective holds can be costly because of the time and number of officers they take to enforce, but training can overcome the problem.

'Nothing gold can stay'

BUDDY CHARLES MANGINE/The Times-News

Clarence Wynn has quite an undertaking this fall. Wynn, who lives on the corner of his block in Twin Falls, said not only does he have to contend with the leaves dropped from a 60-foot maple tree in his front yard, all the leaves on his block and the next block blow directly into his yard. Already he has raked up 10 bags full, and he anticipates at least another 40 bags.

Commission rejects message center

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Ads for mall sales don't need to be run on an electronic sign within 1,100 feet of the Perrine Bridge, city planners said Tuesday evening.

By a 6-1 vote, the city planning and zoning commission rejected the Magic Valley Mall's request to place an electronic message center in front of its property on Blue Lakes Boulevard North.

Though commission members said the city could not prohibit message centers outright, they agreed that the center did not need to be so close to the Snake River Canyon.

They said the sign would pose a safety hazard for motorists crossing the Perrine Bridge into town, where Blue Lakes Boulevard curves sharply around the mall. The sign would also spoil the city's dramatic entryway at the canyon, some argued.

"We don't need to know the time and temperature as we enter the city," said commission member Vickie Traxler.

Commission member Stephanie Crumrine cited city laws that allow the commission to reject message centers that intrude upon public views of open spaces, or those that "impose a foreign or inharmonious element to an existing skyline."

City officials had thought the proposed electronic display would be located in front of the new Elmer's restaurant at the intersection of Blue Lakes and Canyon Springs Road. But the mall's manager, Brent White, said Tuesday evening that the 35-foot-tall sign needed to be placed farther north near the site of a planned Chili's restaurant.

That was where the city had approved just such a sign in 1988, and the mall's anchor stores won't allow the message center to be placed anywhere else on the mall property, White told the planning commission.

The message center would have been 24 feet tall, about one foot taller than the new strip shopping center under construction at the mall.

After the vote, White told the commission that he would go back to his management, and to the mall's anchor stores, to see if an alternative proposal can be made to the city.

In other business Tuesday evening, the planning commission OK'd a proposal by the Episcopal Church of the Ascension to build four soccer fields on 12 acres the church owns on Eastland Drive.

The church still needs to provide fencing or berms along its eastern and western boundaries, and must submit a formal parking plan for the property, located on Eastland Drive south of Filer Avenue and north of Hillcrest Drive.

Mark and Dawn Makin also received approval Tuesday for a beer and wine permit at the new Aroma restaurant at 837 Pole Line Road in the Concept 91 subdivision.

Canyon-rim laws head for City Council

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – New canyon-rim laws are heading for final action by the City Council Nov. 21.

The city planning and zoning commission approved the proposed regulations on development near the Rock Creek or Snake River canyons in a hearing that went late into the night Tuesday.

If approved by the council, the city would create a canyon rim overlay zone that would affect any property located within 1,000 feet of the canyon rims. An overlay zone adds an extra set of guidelines that supplement an existing development zone.

These guidelines would apply inside Twin Falls city limits and in the impact area that surrounds the city.

Developers would face tougher restrictions on the locations, colors and heights of new buildings near the rims under the regulations. The planning commission made minor changes Tuesday evening that would relax some of those restrictions.

The commission decided that building colors need not be "dark" so long as the building's looks are compatible with the surroundings of the canyon.

Castleford rancher charged in cattle theft

By Terrell Williams
Times-News correspondent

TWIN FALLS – The manager of a ranch south of Castleford has been charged with presenting false information to obtain a written permit for a brand inspection, attempting to conceal a brand and grand theft.

The charges were filed against William Brown, 45, said Twin Falls County Deputy Prosecuting Attorney John Lothspeich. A preliminary hearing Friday will be continued in about three weeks, Lothspeich said Tuesday. If due cause for a case is found during the preliminary hearing in magistrate court, the case will be bound over to 5th District Court for trial, he said.

The case involves the attempted sale of 54 calves at Producer's Livestock Marketing Association in Jerome. Leonard and Andy Olmstead of Washington say they own the calves. Lothspeich said Brown and his family leased a ranch from the Olmsteads in the Castleford-Rosworth area with an arrangement that would give

Drunken guitar thief nabbed

By William Brock

Felipe Rodriguez, 38, was arrested at The Music Center, at 221 Main Ave. E. Shortly afterward, Jose Silva was arrested outside the store while he waited in his van with the motor running.

Rodriguez was charged with two counts of petty theft, and one count of carrying a concealed weapon. Silva was charged with driving under the influence of intoxicants, possessing an open container of alcohol, carrying a concealed weapon, and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Employees and patrons of The Music Center had subdued Rodriguez by the time police arrived Tuesday. According to police documents on file with Magistrate

EchoHawk presses Batt for entire tax return

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — Democratic gubernatorial candidate Larry EchoHawk called again Wednesday for GOP opponent Phil Batt to release his entire tax return, not just part of it.

Batt on Tuesday, in response to repeated requests from his opponent and others, through an accountant released part of his 1993 federal income tax return. It showed adjusted gross income of $324,989, including nearly $200,000 as his share of a farm sale, contributions of $67,497 and state and federal taxes paid of about $79,000.

"A portion of one year is not good enough," EchoHawk said. He released three years of tax returns showing little income above his state salary of $67,500 as attorney general.

"I believe in open government and financial disclosure," EchoHawk said. "The voters deserve more from the men who are seeking the state's highest office."

"All Phil Batt has told us is that he has made a lot of money and he paid some taxes. We need to know a lot more," he said.

"We need to know where his money comes from, what subsidies he has received and what his holdings are," EchoHawk said. "I have information, for instance, that Mr. Batt owns a condo in a retirement community in Arizona and he has understated his federal subsidies."

The return released by Batt's accountant showed a $935 property tax payment for an Arizona condominium.

Batt said he didn't directly get federal subsidies from farming operations. Later he acknowledged that the farm he leases gets subsidies, which affect the amount of profit it earns but not the amount he receives.

Batt said the amount averaged about $10,000 per year. However, federal records for the last six years show the subsidy totaled about $80,000, or about $13,330 per year.

LaRocco claims he didn't lie about affair

BOISE (AP) — Embattled Democratic Congressman Larry LaRocco insisted Wednesday he did not deceive the public two years ago when he denied any involvement in a sexual discrimination dispute with a woman employee he had an affair with while working at a Boise stock brokerage.

"I was not deceptive," LaRocco told Boise business and civic leaders as he tried to rebound from the report that the discrimination dispute involving him actually occurred.

It has seriously jeopardized his bid for a third term that was already subject to a strong attack from conservative Republican challenger Helen Chenoweth, whose campaign contributions were beginning to pick up.

The Idaho Statesman verified this week that LaRocco's sales assistant at Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood Inc. was paid at least $40,000 to head off a civil damage suit for sexual discrimination because the woman lost her job over the affair she had with LaRocco while he suffered no consequences at all.

The Statesman obtained copies of both the check stub and the draft complaint to support its report. The complaint was not filed once the settlement was reached.

Speaking to the generally Republican Rotary Club of southwest Boise, LaRocco reiterated his original contention that his negative response to questions about the existence of the incident was accurate because it was the brokerage — not him — that handled the incident.

While admitting knowledge of the sealed settlement, LaRocco said, "I was never a party of any negotiations. I was never consulted. I paid no money."

With his wife of 27 years Chris on the podium during the speech, LaRocco said, "People wanted me to talk about our relationship, our lives, our privacy. I said, 'No,' to that."

'Chris is my best friend, my lover and my wife. ... We're not Ozzie and Harriet. We are a contemporary family that kept a marriage together and it took a lot of work. ... I stand up for that.'

— Rep. Larry LaRocco

He declared newspaper headlines saying he had lied inaccurate, and he again blasted the media for the attention it has given to the report, claiming Chenoweth was behind it.

"Stolen documents, anonymous sources two weeks before the election," he said. "I know what's going on."

Chenoweth has denied that her campaign was in any way involved.

LaRocco, however, has acknowledged the affair, and he emphasized to Rotarians that it was wrong.

"I am not a perfect individual, and I have made decisions that I am not proud of in my personal life," he said.

But pointing at his wife, he added, "when those decisions were bad decisions, these two people worked it out — Chris and Larry."

"Chris is not here today because it's convenient," he said. "Chris is my best friend, my lover and my wife. ... We're not Ozzie and Harriet. We are a contemporary family that kept a marriage together and it took a lot of work. ... I stand up for that."

And he maintained that voters are sloughing off the incident, citing a woman he met during a tour Wednesday morning of a manufactured housing plant in Nampa.

"You hang in there. We don't like it," LaRocco said the woman told him, and he told the nearly 100 Rotarians, "Well I don't like it either, but this is what I signed up for."

The fallout from the disclosure appeared to be mixed. The president of the Idaho Association of Letter Carriers said he put a hold on additional financial support for LaRocco and union endorsement of him until getting a further explanation.

But despite questions about deception, leaders of women's groups appeared willing to continue backing LaRocco, who has a strong abortion rights and family planning record, over Chenoweth, who opposes abortion in all but limited instances.

"Whatever has occurred in his personal life, his public demeanor and voting record clearly show him to be an advocate of women's rights," said Mary Kelly McColl of Planned Parenthood of Idaho. "I think those two things are what women will consider."

School director allowed to impose population caps

POCATELLO (AP) – The state Board of Education has authorized the director of the Idaho School for the Deaf and Blind in Gooding to cap the number of students in campus housing units if necessary for their safety.

James Rainier said Tuesday that he needed permission to limit the population of student cottages in part because out-of-state students are aggravating a crowding problem that could lead to Idaho students being denied admission under the school's first-come, first-served policy.

For example, Rainier said he recently was threatened with a lawsuit unless he admitted an 18-year-old Washington youth reportedly living in the Coeur d'Alene area even though the school's cottage for high school boys already has three more students than its design capacity of 12.

He said he encouraged the teen-ager's parents to establish a residence in the Twin Falls area so their son could be bused to Gooding for classes.

"I have plenty of room in the classroom," Rainier said. "It's that I don't have a bed for him at this point."

All but one of the school's seven student cottages house more than the 12 children for which they were designed. The early childhood cottage houses nine students, but the others all have 13, 14 or 15. Rainier said bunk beds have been put in some rooms to increase their capacity from two to three.

Students from widely different age groups cannot be placed together in cottages, he said, because of emotional or behavior problems. Rainier said the school has asked for planning money to build an early childhood-infirmary center that would free up space in two cabins to house some of the school's 93 resident students.

With population caps at his discretion, Rainier said he would establish a waiting list for students who apply for spots in cottages that are filled.

No need seen for investigation into initiative

BOISE (AP) — The attorney general's office says there's nothing wrong with opposition by the Idaho Association of Counties to the term limits initiative, and there's no need for an investigation into that spending.

Beau Parent, executive director of Idahoans for Term Limits, on Wednesday called for an investigation into what he called "a gross misuse of property tax dollars."

Parent said the counties' association gets 80 percent of its funding from local property taxes, and it's wrong to use public funds to campaign against a ballot issue.

But the attorney general's office said late Wednesday the same question came up five years ago and the answer remains the same.

"It is the opinion of this office that the activities of the Idaho Association of Counties are not prohibited by state law. Therefore, we decline your request to investigate," said Deputy Attorney General Frank Walker.

"IAC may properly protect the interests of its constituents from what it perceives as the potential adverse effects of an initiative by informing the electorate of its position and the expected effects thereof," Walker said.

Walker noted that in 1989, Attorney General Jim Jones was asked whether it was a violation for a municipality to pay dues to the Association of Idaho Cities or the Idaho Association of Counties. Jones said cities and counties could join municipal leagues whose purpose was to assist those entities in carrying out their governmental functions.

That makes the spending of public funds on associations an expenditure for a "public purpose" which is permitted, the opinion said.

"The term limits initiative, if approved by Idaho voters, will have the same force and effect as a law passed by the Idaho Legislature. Consequently, actions taken by IAC to inform the voters of Idaho of this association's position and the probable effect of the initiative on counties are equivalent to actions taken to inform the Legislature regarding bills being considered," Walker said.

Brown a share of the proceeds from the cattle.

In the false information charge, prosecutors accuse Brown of putting a daughter's name, rather than Olmsteads' name, on the written application to obtain a permit for a brand inspection.

The charge of attempting to conceal a brand claims that the Olmstead brand was put lightly on the calves' ribs as a hair brand, while a second brand, "arrow lazy J," registered to Brown's daughter in Texas, was burned into the hip as a clear and permanent hide brand. Lothspeich said the Olmstead brand grew out and was nearly impossible to detect.

The charge of grand theft stems from the attempted sale of the calves. Lothspeich said proceeds of the sale were frozen by the brand inspector.

Twin Falls County Deputy Sheriff Jim Webb said his department has been investigating this cattle theft case since May, when the Olmsteads requested help. Charges against Brown were filed on or about Sept. 28. No charges were filed against Brown's daughter.

Webb said he is wary of releasing any more details of the case until it is heard in court.

"There's quite a bit at stake on this," he said. Webb noted that this is the largest cattle theft case he knows of in this area.

Brand inspector Casey Bartholomew, who worked with Webb on the case and who inspected the cattle that Brown allegedly brought to the sale yard in Jerome, also declined comment at this time.

Lothspeich said the investigation began about five months ago when the Olmsteads dropped by their ranch and noticed the variant brands. The Olmsteads, he said, then contacted Webb's office.

"Taking them into custody is not always the answer to the problem," Hall added. "Sometimes it's important to get family members or friends involved."

Dr. Kent Pressman, director of Magic Valley Regional Medical Center's emergency room, said caring for mentally ill patients before they get to the point of having to be committed to a state psychiatric hospital also will cut down costs. Professionals, he said, need to work together.

With the number of mental-health cases increasing, there may not be enough room in state psychiatric hospitals, which already is a problem, Williams said.

Worst said Magic Valley suicide rates are rising, especially among adolescents.

"Young people are definitely having more trouble," said Worst, adding that people with homicidal tendencies are not as common.

Monument-type signs, once limited to a height of five feet, now can be eight feet tall.

The laws still redefine the distances buildings must be set back from the rims and hamper the ability of a developer to ask the city to make exceptions in its canyon-rim standards.

Public comment will be taken on the laws in council hearings scheduled for Nov. 21, Nov. 28 and Dec. 5. City Planning Director LaMar Orton said Wednesday. The council, however, can vote on the laws as early as the first hearing on Nov. 21.

Copies of the proposed regulations can be reviewed at City Hall.

A citywide moratorium on canyon-rim development ends Nov. 20.

Court, he was intoxicated at the time of his arrest.

During a routine search, officers discovered that Rodriguez was carrying a .22-caliber pistol and a large knife. They also found a bottle of men's cologne, allegedly stolen from the Crowley Pharmacy at 144 Main Ave. S.

Music Center employees told police that Rodriguez had been strolling to and from Silva's van prior to his arrest.

Officers confronted Silva in his van, where they found two open containers of beer on the console. According to court documents, Silva said he was waiting for his wife to get off of work – but later conceded that he was waiting for Rodriguez.

Silva was asked to shut off his engine and attempt a few field sobriety tests – but he failed all four tests, police said.

He was then asked to sit in a patrol car, where he allegedly stashed a wallet with two plastic bags containing a white substance. Asked about the bags, Silva declared they had been planted by police.

Inside the van, police found a smoking pipe containing burnt marijuana, and a knife under the seat. The van was later impounded because it was parked in a no-parking zone.

Down at the police station, Silva said he was willing to take a breath test for alcohol, but he failed to cooperate and police rated his performance as a refusal.

Both men pleaded innocent Wednesday in Magistrate Court and public defenders were appointed. Bond was set at $1,500 for Rodriguez and $1,000 for Silva.

Groups ranging from the Retired Senior Volunteer Program to Pen Pals for England will be represented, both to dispense information and to learn how to help clients who need referrals.

"I think that was especially valuable last year, in helping organizations like ours learn about what other agencies had to offer and to help other organizations learn about us," said Sharon Heck of the Center for New Directions.

"Many of the people we deal with are looking for a job or other basic services," said Ruth Scott, who heads the adult basic education service at the College of Southern Idaho. "It's useful for us to know where to send them for help."

"We thought it was valuable last year because it was another resource we could use," said Bryan Langley, the placement supervisor for the Idaho Department of Employment's Twin Falls office.

Dozens of organizations, ranging from Campfire to Neighbors in Need, are looking for volunteers and many more for those in need of help.

Among them are Idaho Legal Aid Services; the Idaho Powgr Co.; the Idaho Youth Ranch; Magic Valley Regional Medical Center; Magic Valley Rehabilitation Services; Health and Welfare's divisions of Family and Children's Services and Mental Health; Financial Services Bureau, Adult-Child Development Center, Bureau of Child Support Services, and Substance Abuse Program; the Idaho Department of Education's Division of Vocational Rehabilitation; the Foster Care Advisory Council; the Idaho Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf; the Regional Infant/Toddler Committee; the Twin Falls School District; the Twin Falls Senior Citizens Center; the Idaho Commission for the Blind; Canyon View Hospital and Guardian Ad Litem.

Other participating organizations will include the Scottish Rite Learning Clinic; the Royal Rangers of Blaine County; the South-Central District Health Department; Trans-IV; Volunteers Against Violence, the Walker Center; the Diabetes Center; Port of Hope; the Sawtooth Chapter of the American Red Cross; the Silver Sage Girl Scout Council; the local Social Security office; South Central Head Start; the Center for Independent Living; Child Care Resource and Referral; Community Counseling Services; Gem Case Management, and Green Thumb Inc.

Private investors buy media firm

The Times-News

BURLEY – A group of private investors will buy Park Communications Inc. for $711,427,000, the company announced Tuesday.

In Idaho, Park Communications owns the South Idaho Press, Minidoka County News and the Wood River Journal.

The investors intend to keep the staff and management of the corporation, according to a news release. The buyers are headed by Donald Tomlin and Dr. Gary Knapp, the release said.

Jack Claiborne, vice-president of the media group based in Ithaca, N.Y., declined to say who the investors are. He said he didn't know how many investors the group includes.

Park Communications owns nine television stations, 22 radio stations and 106 newspapers, 30 of them dailies, in 21 states, chiefly in the East and South.

Park's stockholders and the Federal Communications Commission have not yet approved the buyout, the release said.

The media corporation has been for sale since March, five months after the death of its founder, Roy Park, Claiborne said. The Park family owns the majority of the stock, he said.

The decision to sell the company came after the estate of Roy H. Park, the company's founder, decided to dispose of its 89.6 percent stake, Claiborne said at the time.

In his will, Park left 51 percent of company stock to a foundation for employees to invest in and much of the rest to his family.

Park died last Oct. 25 at age 83. Forbes magazine had recently listed him as the 175th richest American with an estimated worth of $550 million.

After his death, Dorothy Park assumed her husband's place at the head of the company's board. Roy H. Park Jr. joined the board after his father died.

Switch failure extinguishes power

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A switch failure at an east Salt Lake substation was believed to have triggered a power outage in northern Utah Wednesday afternoon.

Utah Power spokeswoman Margaret Kesler said the cause of the outage, which struck around 3 p.m. at the McLellan Substation, was under investigation.

"We think it was a switch failure," she said. "They have isolated the problems and are working on that."

Kesler said most of the power had been restored by 3:30 p.m., although areas remained blacked out late Wednesday.

The outage area extended from Woods Cross, about 10 miles north of Salt Lake City, to 20th South, and from the University of Utah on the east bench as far west as Redwood Road.

Voters reject bond issues

The Associated Press

Taxpayers in two eastern Idaho school districts have turned down requests for extra school funding, but in the Fremont School District it was close.

Fremont asked approval of a $9.2 million bond issue to replace a junior high building was closed. An override levy also failed at Idaho Falls.

The Fremont bond proposal lost by 30 votes Tuesday night, receiving 65.8 percent approval of the 2,677 voters who cast ballot, just under the required two-thirds supermajority needed for bonds.

The district wanted money for a new four-year high school to replace South Fremont Junior High, closed due to safety hazards last year.

Patrons in the Idaho Falls School District voted 2,850-2,390 against a school plant facilities levy of $925,000, which required a 60 percent supermajority for approval.

Superintendent Chris Mattocks said the funding request was an attempt to keep school buildings and facilities updated. He said it appears the district will have to ask the Legislature for help in meeting building needs.

Board member Alan Reed said the result should send a message to the Legislature.

Builders seek women's war stories

BURLEY – Wanted: A few good women to share their stories about life in the military for a memorial being created by the Benevolent Patriotic Order of Does nationwide.

In Burley, local members of Drove No. 206 are helping to compile a computer record of women who have served in the armed forces from the American Revolution to the present.

Nearly two million women have served in the nation's armed forces, but most of them have gone unrecognized, the group said. The names will be engraved on a memorial that will be built at the gateway of the Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia.

About 100,000 woman veterans have contacted the service club nationwide. So far, the number of local women who have contacted the local club is unknown.

Those who wish to contribute money or find women for the memorial, may contact the service club at P.O. Box 404, Burley, ID. 83318.

Write-in candidate hungers for debate

NAMPA — Steven Pallesen, who filed as a write-in candidate for governor last week, says he'll stage a hunger strike until he can appear on debates with the three other candidates.

Pallesen, 40, a self-employed Nampa real estate broker, said he will start the hunger strike today on the steps of the Statehouse in Boise.

The three candidates on the ballot, independent Ron Rankin, Democrat Larry EchoHawk and Republican Phil Batt, have two more televised debates scheduled.

But spokesmen for Channel 4 and Channel 7 said rules set by the League of Women Voters and the Idaho Press Club do not allow Pallesen to appear in the debate because his name is not on the ballot.

LaRocco: Feds to fund new bridge

LEWISTON — The Idaho Department of Transportation will get $7.3 million in federal discretionary money to replace the 58-year-old Goff Bridge north of Riggins, Congressman Larry LaRocco says.

Department Director Dwight Bower said U.S. Secretary of Transportation Federico Pena only had $60 million in discretionary money to hand out for bridge replacement projects nationwide. The department sought the money for the Goff Bridge across the Salmon River five months ago, he said.

The federal money is more than the $6 million Idaho Transportation Department gets each year from the federal government for bridge replacement.

Bower said the bridge project must be under contract by October 1995 and completed within a year after. The existing bridge will be moved onto piers to maintain the traffic flow while the new one is built, he said.

Day-care owner must pay for injuries

BOISE — An Ada County day-care owner is liable for $19,000 in damages because her dog bit and scratched a 7-month-old girl, a jury has decided.

But the day-care owner, Geneva Ostler, said she has no insurance to pay medical bills or damages, and probably will file for bankruptcy.

The girl's father, Brian Byrd, said any money he and his wife collect will pay medical bills for their daughter, Danielle, with any remaining amount going into a trust fund. They had asked for $250,000 in damages.

"Justice was served," Byrd said. "The award doesn't matter to me."

Court denies county role in resuscitation

BOISE — County commissioners with no particular medical expertise are in no position to decide when emergency personnel should abandon efforts to revive a dying patient, the Idaho Court of Appeals says.

The court Wednesday unanimously rejected an appeal from Jefferson County. The opinion was written by Judge Darrel Perry.

The county resisted paying bills run up at Eastern Idaho Regional Medical Center, Idaho Falls, after a Jefferson County woman's heart stopped after she suffered a severe asthma attack.

The Court of Appeals relied on the statement of Dr. Scott Packer, the emergency room physician who treated the woman. He said it was incumbent upon him to make a determination whether the woman could be revived, and at 6:28 p.m., he stopped the resuscitation efforts.

Man hits 6-year-old girl with brick

BOISE — A paranoid schizophrenic man repeatedly smashed a brick into the head of a 6-year-old Boise girl at a child-care center, police say.

After searching for more than three hours Tuesday, police arrested Zane Garland, 25, at his home. He was taken to the Ada County Jail and charged with aggravated battery. His parents say they knew something was going to happen.

Convinced he would hurt someone, Garland's parents called the police. But but by that time, Garland was behaving more calmly. Officers said they could do nothing. Minutes later, a man matching his description attacked the girl.

The victim, whose name was not available, was in serious condition at St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center Tuesday night. The operator of the child care center witnessed the attack.

Driver of sunk pickup presumed dead

COEUR d'ALENE — A Squaw Bay man is presumed dead after his pickup plunged into Wolf Lodge Bay on Lake Coeur d'Alene.

Divers continued to search for the victim's body Wednesday in the murky water. The victim's name was withheld pending notification of relatives.

A sheriff's department clerical employee driving home saw the accident in her rearview mirror about 6 p.m., said Kootenai County Sheriff Pierce Clegg.

She reported keeping an eye on the pickup because it was driving erratically before she passed it on Idaho Highway 97, Clegg said.

Board eyes another hearing in sex case

POCATELLO — The state Board of Education has ordered another hearing on a complaint alleging Deary High School teacher Dennis Jensen engaged in inappropriate sexual conduct with students.

The case also prompted the board at its meeting Wednesday in Pocatello to direct member Karl Shurtliff, a Boise attorney, to work with lawmakers on legislation to change the hearing process for such complaints.

Jensen, who was suspended from his teaching job in March, was cleared by a panel of three Lewiston teachers after a three-day hearing in August. Based on its findings, the state Department of Education's Professional Standards Commission recommended dismissal of the complaint seeking revocation or suspension of his teaching certificate.

Lewis-Clark head knocks closure proposal

POCATELLO (AP) — Lewis-Clark State College interim President Mike Glenn is defending his school against the latest objection to its existence.

Independent gubernatorial candidate Ron Rankin last week said the Lewiston school is not a high priority among state educational needs.

Rankin claimed the state does not need four institutions, especially a college "within rock-throwing distance" of the University of Idaho.

Glenn, addressing the state Board of Education Tuesday in Pocatello, said Lewis-Clark's existence is called into question periodically.

It is demoralizing to students, teachers and staff, he said, adding Rankin's comments are counterproductive, Glenn said.

"I guess it shows a special sense of ignorance," he said. "I can damn well tell you it's energy-draining.

"We know exactly who we are, who we are serving," Glenn said, but Lewis-Clark welcomes the chance to reaffirm its mission. Glenn was an administrator at the College of Southern Idaho in Twin Falls before taking the post with the Lewiston college.

The state board and school presidents will begin next month the process of revisiting the role and mission statements for each school. The University of Idaho's mission, for example, includes primary responsibility for engineering, agriculture, forestry and other land-grant studies.

Boise's Micron Technology, however, has offered the state $6 million on condition an independent college of engineering be established at Boise State.

The Moscow school also is responsible for the state's participation in regional medical education programs.

Board allows college to accept polluted land

POCATELLO (AP) — The state Board of Education has authorized the University of Idaho to acquire a contaminated 10-acre parcel in Moscow.

The board, despite objections from three of its members, Tuesday allowed the school to accept it from Burlington Northern Leasing Company.

Crews are nearly finished cleaning up the property, the site of an industrial park for decades, polluted with petroleum and farm chemicals.

State board member Joe Parkinson said the school could face substantial liability costs if cleanup efforts are not successful.

Board members Judy Meyer and Curtis Eaton shared Parkinson's concerns, Eaton suggesting the school pursue a two-year lease before accepting ownership of the property. But board President Roy Mosman noted Boise State sits atop a garbage dump.

Ambassador to France faces domestic troubles from family

NEW YORK (AP) — Her 74 years have been filled with privilege and power, with tribulation and, some say, titillation.

Now, while America's ambassador to France, she has become embroiled in a decidedly undiplomatic, domestic mess: a court brawl over her late husband's millions.

The life of Pamela Digby Churchill Hayward Harriman is seldom humdrum.

Mrs. Harriman — coincidentally or, detractors say, calculatingly — achieved a lifetime of inarguably lucrative love interests in an era when a woman's success often depended on a man. Then, last year, she stepped from behind the scenes, soaring solo with a high-profile career as the head of a major embassy.

Publicity about her family's blue-blooded backbiting could bring her crashing to earth.

Her late husband's children and grandchildren — described as cringing at the prospect of airing their soiled, old-money laundry — are doing just that in Manhattan federal court.

Mrs. Harriman and other "faithless fiduciaries," they charge, "betrayed a trust and squandered a family's inheritance" to the tune of about $30 million. Mrs. Harriman says she wasn't responsible for the soured investments.

"She gave hundreds of thousands of dollars to the children and grandchildren," both as advances and gifts, said her lawyer, Roy Reardon.

"These are the same children, grandchildren who have sued her," he said. "These same people who are suing her owe her millions of dollars in loans and guarantees."

The latest installment: a lawsuit filed in Virginia by those heirs, who want repayment of millions they say she borrowed from trusts there.

The newspaper France Soir has called Mrs. Harriman — unflaggingly energetic, astutely self-educated — "the iron lady in the silk suit." But a sometimes sizzling past is portrayed in "Life of the Party," an unauthorized biography. (Mrs. Harriman began collaborating with the author, Christopher Ogden, and then changed her mind).

There were, Ogden writes, "few men ... who would not crawl over broken glass to have Pamela."

"After a few moments spent in conversation with Pamela, those men sensed that no one else in the world existed for her," says the book. "As her reputation grew, receiving the full-frontal Pamela treatment, being Pamelaized, was a heady experience for most men."

British-born Pamela D.C.H. Harriman was an agile climber in a world of thousand-dollar cocktail dresses and living room Picassos. She has been toasted by President Clinton, sipped tea with Raisa Gorbachev, and palled around with a host of Kennedys, from JFK on down.

So how did she get all those names? She divorced, then was widowed twice. From last to first, her husbands were:

Harriman

• HARRIMAN, Averell, the U.S. statesman and polo-playing son of a railroad magnate who aroused her involvement in — and, eventually, her sway over — the uppermost echelons of the Democratic Party.

• HAYWARD, Leland, the Broadway and movie producer ("South Pacific," "The Sound of Music," "Gypsy") and talent agent (Fred Astaire, Clark Gable, Judy Garland.)

• CHURCHILL, Randolph, the politician son of British Prime Minister Winston Churchill.

She was born Pamela Digby, the daughter of a British baron and product of a French finishing school. By age 19, she was partying at the family castle of a friend, where Errol Flynn, Clark Gable, Jimmy Stewart and Douglas Fairbanks Jr. flocked to ride, shoot, golf, and swim in a pool of filtered moat water.

A chance meeting brought her together with Randolph Churchill, who proposed on their second or third date.

When her new father-in-law, Winston, became prime minister, Pamela became a valued resource. "It seemed natural for me to be entertaining Gen. Marshall or Gen. Eisenhower," she once said.

She gave birth in October 1940 to Winston Spencer Churchill.

Soon, her husband's gambling plunged the family into "a financial abyss," the biography says. Pamela sold their wedding presents, got a government job, hustled dinner invitations and vowed "never to feel so helpless again."

In 1941, while her husband was away at war, she met Harriman. The book claims they found comfort in each other's arms during and after an air raid. But duty — to country and to wife — called; he departed for the time being.

Solace reportedly was supplied, for a time, by broadcaster Edward R. Murrow.

In December 1945, Pamela was granted a divorce from Churchill, on the grounds of desertion. Still, she remained friendly with the Churchill clan.

The wags can't forget some of the widely rumored liaisons that followed: Aly Khan, son of the Muslim spiritual leader, Aga Khan; Gianni Agnelli, the billionaire Fiat heir; Elie de Rothschild, of the Chateau Lafite vineyard family.

At one point, the book says, Pamela and Gianni were the houseguests of his close friend, Count Rudy Crespi. During morning coffee with their host, Gianni, "as was his frequent habit in private in hot weather, wore nothing."

"Pamela entered, naked as well, walked straight over to Crespi and, without batting an eye, shook his hand."

Former fighter pilot pieces together parts of times gone by

Seattle Times

SEATTLE — Ah, nothing like a shard of windshield to buoy the soul.

That is, if you are Philip Wright and the windshield is from your P-47 Thunderbolt fighter plane, which you last saw a half-century ago nose-diving toward the German countryside.

Boom. Goodbye, Thunderbolt.

Wright, a lusty, crusty, fun-loving retired Air Force pilot, recently was reunited with his old plane — or at least parts of it: pieces of windshield, some engine parts, a couple of 50-caliber bullets as big as Cuban cigars – thanks to an extraordinary set of coincidences and a young German man with a metal detector.

The fragments, which Wright handles gingerly, as if they were jewels, mean a lot to him. A part of his life has come full circle, not to mention that it's been a kick to be reminded at age 70 that life can be astounding.

"The whole thing boggles the mind," he says, referring to the events that eventually brought the plane fragments back to him.

The Livingston, Mont., resident was in Seattle in mid-October to attend a reunion of the 36th Fighter Group, which was based in Ashford, England, during World War II.

'The whole thing boggles the mind.'

— Phillip Wright, retired Air Force pilot

The story began two years ago with a tennis match at a friend's house outside Livingston. One of the players that day was a young pastor who happened to be from a town north of Frankfurt, near where Wright's plane had crashed.

Wright told the pastor how on March 10, 1945, he parachuted, from his burning plane and landed in the back yard of a house near the village of Giessen (and eventually became a prisoner of war).

A few weeks later the pastor introduced Wright to a visiting German couple who happened to be from Giessen. Wright told them his story.

The couple returned to Germany, and a month later, they sent Wright a picture of the house where he landed. Wright wrote the owner, who then invited him to visit. In February this year, Wright and his wife accepted the invitation.

Wright was amazed at how the village received him. He had become a sort of legend in those parts, and his return was covered by local media.

Enter a 30-year-old German man named Andraes Dort, who found out about Wright's visit after the ex-pilot returned to the United States.

Dort happened to have a lifelong obsession with the legend of the American pilot who crashed near his village. Dort, who for years had been unearthing the crashed plane piece by piece using a metal detector, through letters told Wright what happened to his P-47 after it crashed.

Villagers took parts of the plane as keepsakes. Dort's grandfather took sheets of metal to cover a wood pile, and his great-grandmother used the parachute to make pillow slips and underwear.

"I prefer to call them 'unmentionables,'" Wright says, grinning.

Early last month, Dort began sending Wright parts of his plane, starting with a box of glass from the plane's windshield. As the pieces accumulated, Wright says he became increasingly amazed.

He was only 20 at the time of the crash, a lieutenant and the youngest officer in his squadron. They called him Junior. He had flown 59 successful missions. Sixty were needed to become eligible to go home.

He was shot down on his 60th mission. The P-47 Thunderbolt he was flying was brand new. "It smelled like a new car. I was kind of babying it all along."

Nearly 50 years later, Wright is showing off the miscellaneous fragments — fragments he cleaned and polished with pocket knives and steel wool.

He picks up the gnarled pieces of metal and glass, identifies them with a fondness in his voice. "This is part of an ignition wiring harness. This is a link ejection chute ..."

He looks at them closely before carefully placing them back down on a table, not wanting to damage them, as if they had already gone through enough in this life.

The little town that stood alone

Troy stands out as only community in nation to protect gay rights

TROY (AP) — The mayor and City Council of Troy never expected to stand alone in the deepening political quicksand of Proposition One.

This northern Idaho town, tucked between hills 11 miles east of Moscow, is the only city or county in Idaho with a policy that protects city employees from discrimination based on sexual orientation.

The U.S. Census pegs the town's population at 646, but current estimates put it at 820.

Either way, it's the smallest municipality in the country to extend such protection to public employees. The next-smallest are Aspen, Colo., pop. 5,049, and Marshall, Minn., with 12,023 residents.

Troy added sexual orientation to the city's non-discrimination clause in December 1993 after an unremarkable council meeting. Troy has five employees: a full-time clerk, a part-time clerk, two full-time maintenance workers and a part-time police chief.

Mayor Marie Vogel describes the policy as no big deal. It only became a cause celebre when Troy was cited by both sides in the fight over gay rights:

"We were reviewing our personnel policy," said Vogel, who volunteers as mayor. "We were looking at things that make the job more comfortable to our employees. When Kelly Walton (Proposition One proponent) started his big push, a lot of public officials took a stand against Proposition One. ... I brought it to the council's attention, it was discussed briefly."

The city found itself very much alone. Vogel thought other Idaho cities would adopt similar policies as a stand against the initiative.

"All of a sudden, we were in the news. I was surprised that anybody cared we had done this," she said.

To proponents of Proposition One, Troy represents the feared incursion of a gay agenda in public policy. To opponents, the community is a brave, front-line defender of civil rights.

"It starts the ball rolling in the state," said Bill Proctor, executive director of the Idaho Citizens Alliance, which is pushing the initiative. "It's an example of what's going on in Cincinnati, San Francisco, Aspen and Denver, where they have ordinances that give special rights to the gay community."

Brian Bergquist, chairman of the No On One Coalition, said Troy's action is an example of a town standing up for what it believes is right.

If passed by Idaho voters Nov. 8, Proposition One would prevent the state from extending protection against discrimination specifically to gays and lesbians and would prevent state money from being used to promote homosexuality as acceptable. In addition, it would keep from minors public library books addressing homosexuality.

Troy appears an unlikely entry in such a controversial political debate. Residents say they are neighborly and tend to stay out of contentious issues — unless they involve the occasional annexation squabble.

From either end of town, visitors descend into Troy after a drive through some of Idaho's loveliest farm country. On a bright fall day, the wavy hills of the Palouse, neatly combed by tractors, reveal deep brown soil and golden wheat fields.

> 'It wasn't controversial. It was a routine thing. It was a general principle.'
>
> — City Clerk John Danforth, on Troy's policy of protecting city employees from discrimination based on sexual orientation

Troy's Main Street takes about 20 seconds to cruise, if you're following the 25 mph speed limit — and Police Chief KT Whiteley strongly advises that you do.

The grocery store, town pub, volunteer Fire Department and community library line the street, along with an espresso shop that reflects the cosmopolitan citizenry.

The second-term mayor insists Troy isn't small in its attitudes, and that explains the decision to amend the discrimination policy.

"The town has a lot of diverse people in it, and we're very accepting of people's personal rights," Vogel, 55, said in the kitchen of her home, where she runs a day care. Pachelbel's "Canon" wafted through the speakers, lulling to sleep several children napping on her living room floor.

"It's an important and necessary start to say we will not discriminate against anyone if they can do their jobs. We aren't going to enter their bedrooms."

Troy's city employees, like some other residents, say they don't particularly care one way or the other about the policy.

City Clerk John Danforth, 51, said any flak was created outside Troy.

"It wasn't controversial. It was a routine thing. It was a general principle. It had nothing to do with a situation that existed. People didn't know whether any of us was gay, and they didn't care," Danforth said.

But the employees and the town haven't been thrilled with the glare of regional and national media attention. An ABC News crew stuck a camera in their faces. When a newspaper reporter whipped out a notebook recently, a few people — though unfailingly polite — winced like they were having a tooth yanked.

"It doesn't bother me none," shrugs city maintenance worker Rich Dimmick, 30. "I know I'm not a homosexual. At first, I didn't like it (the policy) at all. I didn't think it was needed."

City employees weren't consulted before the action.

"I just figure they were being good Scouts and being prepared before it was forced down their throats," said Whiteley, in her late 40s.

On a few occasions, employees have been teased by residents, who ask them, "Which one of you is gay?"

Dimmick said one person shouted at him, "You ... faggot."

Whiteley, a wry woman who is not afraid to kick up dust, said the policy has given "a few slime buckets in town another thing to call me."

She hastens to add that the slime-bucket contingent is only three or four strong.

Danforth said most residents don't treat the staff differently.

Business owners shy away from discussing politics and say they aren't taking a stand on the policy.

Keith Lunders is an exception.

The machinist, who owns K&M Parts & Repairs, telegraphs his political views with a poster of Helen Chenoweth, the Republican congressional challenger, in his business' front window.

"The feedback I got was, the majority of business people thought it was unnecessary," Lunders, 50, said over the din of grinding metal.

"They were really upset. I kind of feel the same way. I'm of the opinion that homosexuality is an elective lifestyle. I think it is a very dangerous lifestyle."

Lunders said the city employees felt the policy "kind of cast a stigma on them that one of them is gay."

He also thinks Vogel is a politician with an unquenchable need for publicity.

Vogel recently lost a Democratic primary for the Legislature.

She said her political aims are modest, and she's not sure whether she will run again for mayor when her term expires.

Troy's small gay community applauds the council's action.

"I was stupefied," said Marilyn Stein, 33, a math instructor and graduate student at the University of Idaho. "It took a lot of guts."

Oregon Citizens Alliance cuts off some news outlets

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — The Oregon Citizens Alliance will no longer talk with reporters from newspapers and broadcast stations that refuse to run its advertisements supporting its latest anti-gay-rights measure.

"They are censoring us," Alliance chairman Lon Mabon said on Tuesday.

Mabon also said that an independent candidate for Congress had agreed to use some of the alliance's material in his own television ads, a move that apparently will leave television stations with little choice but to run the material.

The alliance policy about not giving interviews applies to The Oregonian and to The Register-Guard of Eugene, which both have rejected its preprinted advertising insert.

Mabon said his group also would grant no further interviews to Portland television stations KGW, KOIN and KPTV.

He said the stations refused to air a commercial containing images of semi-nude men from a videotape that allegedly was shown to eighth-grade boys at a Beaverton school.

One television station in eastern Idaho has refused to run advertisements from either side in the campaign over the Idaho Citizens Alliance's anti-gay initiative.

Mabon said the news organizations were keeping up a "negative drumbeat" of criticism of Measure 13, which attempts to enact an anti-gay-rights policy in Oregon.

KPTV General Manager Martin Brantley said his station had not made a decision yet on whether to run the ads.

The top executives at KGW and KOIN said they rejected the ads because of questions about libel and accuracy.

Dennis Williamson, general manager of KGW, said his station had not taken a position on Measure 13 but that the ad were rejected because it was "very misleading."

KOIN's general manager, Greg Veon, said his station was concerned about potential libel issues.

Yellowstone wolves may be in peril

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Many of the wolves to be reintroduced in Yellowstone National Park will probably die before they can contribute to repopulating the area, says the biologist in charge of the project.

"The majority won't make it," National Park Service biologist Mike Phillips said. "They won't all necessarily die. Some will die and some just won't make it in the wild long enough to breed and add to the population."

Wildlife reintroduction efforts typically suffer from a mortality rate of 50 percent or more, Phillips said in an interview published Tuesday in The Billings Gazette.

The Park Service and other agencies are putting the finishing touches on their plans for capturing wolves in Canada and then releasing them in Yellowstone and central Idaho.

Some opponents fear that wolves will leave the park and kill livestock. Some also believe use of surrounding public land will be restricted.

Before joining Yellowstone's staff a week ago, Phillips worked for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service overseeing the return of red wolves to the low-lying coastal regions of North Carolina.

"What I really learned was how little we know" about successfully re-establishing extinct wildlife populations, he said. "The wolves will teach us a lot as we go along."

To return wolves to Yellowstone, where the native predators were exterminated by the government in the early part of the century, "You've got to let a lot of wolves go," Phillips said.

Only after releasing about 65 red wolves over the course of more than eight years in North Carolina did biologists determine the animals were numerous enough to recover on their own.

With about 40 red wolves born in the wild, there are now more than 100 roaming about 1 million acres in the Southeast, including 200,000 acres of private land, Phillips said.

Quick Care is quality urgent care provided by local doctors who are available to treat minor emergencies — cuts, burns, sprains, earaches, sore throats, coughs, flu symptoms, etc.

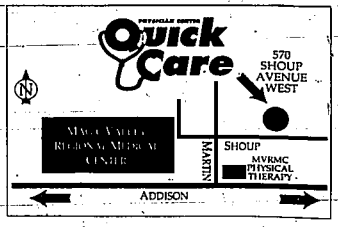

Of course, Quick Care physicians aren't here to replace your family doctor or pediatrician. They are here when you can't see your doctor because of time or scheduling difficulties. Laboratory and x-ray services are always available and our physicians will provide your doctor with a complete record of your treatment at our facility.

Russian sniper a modest lady

L.M. Boyd
What's what?

Q. Who was that Russian woman with the rifle who killed a lot of German soldiers during World War II?

A. Most renowned of many was Ludmilla Pavlichenko. She sniped 309. Typically, she wasn't much interested in fame. Among heroes, the difference between the well-known and the unknown usually comes out of a committee decision.

One "Pop" Coulson, a Walgreen's fountain man, is listed in the historical footnotes as the man who in the 1920s invented the milkshake. Curiously, he didn't win a Nobel for this.

All dogs can make with grey wolves.

You'd be better off if you ate half a dozen unjunky snacks a day rather than two or three big meals. So contend some medical experts. They say the three-meals routine is habit grown out of work schedules.

Girls get better grades than boys all through school. But men get better jobs than women thereafter. Generally. If it's discrimination against the female, why does it only begin after graduation? Why doesn't it begin in the first grade with the first report card? If it's not discrimination, what is it? Every social scholar has an opinion about this matter. What's yours?

In the matter of sea power: Today, 248 ships fly British flags. Forty years ago, about 5,600 did.

Q. Who was Harold Ham Gravy?

A. Olive Oyl's original love interest in the earliest Popeye comic strips, known then as "Thimble Theater."

Q. From what one fruit or vegetable in this country do the most people get the most nutrition?

A. The tomato.

Traditional New Englanders who go to sea for fish differ from other fisher folk in this one way – they abhor tattoos.

Q. What color were dinosaurs' eyes?

A. Reddish to yellowish. Presumably. At least, that's true of most reptilian eyes.

Hostess hopes to hinder her pilfering party guest

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: Last New Year's Eve, my husband invited a co-worker and his new girlfriend to our house.

The co-worker had met her only a month before on a business trip, and she had just flown up a few days prior to New Year's.

A couple of days later, I noticed a bottle of perfumed skin lotion missing from the bathroom. I thought of her, but dismissed it from my mind.

Last month, this couple came over for a party. Once again, a product was missing from the bathroom.

Abby, this woman has been to my house only twice, and both times, after she left, I noticed something was missing. This time, I can't dismiss it. I have a strong suspicion that she took them.

Abby, how can I let her know that I am on to her without causing problems for my husband and his friend?

– ON TO BATHROOM THIEF, NASHUA, N.H.

DEAR ON TO: There is no way you can let her know that you suspect she is a thief without coming right out and telling her.

Although the evidence is overwhelming, never would I make that accusation unless I caught the person red-handed.

DEAR ABBY: When our son was 2 years old, I lost him in a department store. I let go of his hand to hang up a blouse, and he slipped under a rack of clothes and disappeared. I was terrified until I found him 15 minutes later – at the other end of the store!

I went directly to the pet department, purchased a leash, attached it to his pants, and have never taken him shopping again without it.

A year and a half later, my husband and I took our son and two nieces to Washington, D.C.

We had all three children on leashes.

We got plenty of dirty looks from people, but we had no problem with that.

We knew we were protecting those children from getting lost, or worse yet, from being snatched by a child molester or kidnapper. Every parent knows that children tend to wander and investigate new places.

Please print this, but don't use my name. I just want people to know it's OK to put a leash on a child.

– CAREFUL IN GEORGIA

DEAR CAREFUL: Good for you. Many parents who "leash" their youngsters have complained about verbal abuse from strangers, but I'm on your side. I can imagine nothing more terrifying than losing a small child in a crowd.

DEAR READERS: If you read only one book this year, make it "Real Moments" by Barbara DeAngelis (Delacorte Press). It's about real moments that make life matter – and how to have more of them.

It's about experiencing fulfillment in your life NOW, not when you have more money, or when you find the right partner, or achieve your perfect weight. It's about one's quest for happiness:

"First I was dying to finish high school and start college.

"And then I was dying to finish college and start working.

"And then I was dying for my children to grow old enough for school, so I could return to work.

"And then I was dying to retire.

"And now, I am dying ... and suddenly I realize I forgot to live." (Anonymous)

Another gem from this philosophical little book (available in bookstores) by Ms. DeAngelis:

"Yesterday is history.

"Tomorrow is a mystery.

"Today is a gift.

"That's why we call it 'the present.'"

When son wants to be beauty instead of beast

Chicago Tribune

A quiz for the modern, traditional-gender-role-challenging parent:

It is Halloween. Your 3-year-old son has his heart set on the costume of his dreams.

It is Sleeping Beauty. Not the prince, but Beauty herself, in all her feminine splendor.

Do you:

A) Tell him you think he will look lovely, and present him with Mom's jewelry box to help him round out the ensemble?

B) Mutter apologies to your egalitarian principles, and tell him a boy can't be Sleeping Beauty?

C) Nod noncommittally and ask if he wouldn't really rather be a nice Power Ranger instead?

Non-sexist parents like to think they would take cross-gender play in stride. Some even encourage it by offering dolls to their sons and trucks to their daughters.

But while no one blinks at a girl pirate, forward-thinking parents are sometimes surprisingly unnerved by the sight of the young master in high heels and a feather boa.

"I've never seen moms get upset, but I have seen a few fathers get a little nervous when they see their sons dressing up like that," said Jean Komaiko, co-owner of the Homewood Children's Center.

There is no cause for alarm, said Dr. Bennett Leventhal, professor of psychiatry and pediatrics at the University of Chicago Medical Center. In children under 5, he said, such play is neither a symptom of gender confusion nor an early sign of homosexuality.

"It's acting out; it's play," he said.

Parents get upset because boys in our culture are expected to engage in traditionally male pursuits, said Dr. Helen Conran, medical director for child psychiatry at Lutheran General Health System.

3 Twin Falls boys receive Eagle awards

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS — Three young men from the Twin Falls area have earned the Eagle Scout Award through the Boy Scouts of America.

The awards will be presented to Dustin Benson Buck, Drew Robinson Hafer and Ryan Cleve Buttars at a court of honor set for 6 p.m. Sunday at the Twin Falls LDS 7th Ward Church on Eastland Drive North.

To earn the award, scouts must complete at least 21 merit badges and an Eagle project.

Dustin has completed 35 merit badges, which qualifies him to receive bronze and gold palms after six months of being an Eagle. For his project, he constructed a safety box around a play structure at the Migrant Head Start Center on Washington Street. Dustin is 13 and an eighth-grader at O'Leary Junior High School. The son of Kerry and Geraldine Buck is a member of Troop 81, sponsored by the Twin Falls LDS 7th Ward.

Buck

Drew earned 29 merit badges and will receive a bronze palm at a later date. His project consisted of organizing the assembly of a metal storage shed for the playground equipment at the Head Start Learning Center in Twin Falls. Drew, 13, is the son of Chad and Marcene Hafer of Twin Falls and is an eighth-grader at O'Leary Junior High School. He is a member of Troop 100, sponsored by the Twin Falls LDS 3rd Ward.

Hafer

Ryan is also 13 and an eighth-grader at O'Leary Junior High School. He has completed 26 merit badges and will receive a bronze palm in approximately six months. For his project, he planned and organized the work to improve the playground at the El Milagro Migrant Council. He removed grass and weeds and wood-framed a sand-box enclosure for the equipment.

Buttars

Ryan is the son of Cleve and Debra Buttars of Twin Falls and a

Take extra precautions with children during Halloween

Boston Globe

Seems like each year, Halloween gains even more momentum and more popularity among our children. For us as parents, that just raises more questions about safety and appropriateness. Here are some answers to a commonly asked question:

Q. Is it OK to take young children to Halloween haunted houses or theme parks?

A. No. David Bertolino, owner of Spooky World in Berlin, N.H., wisely doesn't recommend his attraction for children under 6. At The House, a haunted house in Holliston, Mass., run by the Montgomery Masonic Lodge, children under 8 are given special glow-sticks so staff members see them coming and know not to "scare the yell" out of them, something House spokesmen Russell Smith says is the general idea.

But precautions like these may not be enough.

Smith remembers one 7-year-old who was so scared he ran out of the house, "and he was only 3 feet into the hallway."

Malcolm Watson, a professor at Brandeis University who researches children's fantasy play, including supernatural fantasy play, tells parents to keep even older children home from these Halloween productions.

They can be too scary for them, he says, and possibly the cause of bad dreams. But there's something else Watson worries about: That children will become desensitized to blood and gore and horror.

While some parents might argue that desensitization is good, because it helps children cope with all the violence in the real world, Watson takes the opposite view. "When they get desensitized, they don't react emotionally or care as much as they should when confronted with a real-life situation."

Newcomer spins wheels in Idaho

I'm new here. I mean, I've just moved to Twin Falls from Wisconsin – land of cheese and beer – where exciting fare for a Sunday afternoon was settling down to a Packer game with a cold Leinie's after raking miles of maple leaves. It's no wonder Wisconsin is consistently rated the fattest state in the nation.

So when my friends and family heard of my impending move to Potato Paradise, they said, "Idaho ... (long pause to mask their ignorance) I hear it's real purty out there."

'Round here
Nicole E. Rogers

Well pretty it is, but behind that beauty lies another essential aspect of life in Idaho – recreation. Sure, I was used to kicking around city parks, swinging on swings and climbing monkey bars. I had taken the occasional canoe trip down the occasional river not-so-wild, I had reeled in a seven-inch bass in a glacier lake.

But lo, upon setting foot on Idaho's dusty soil, a world of opportunity stretched before me like the trillions of stars scattered in the heavens above. At least, I suspected these opportunities were there; I'd heard all about them. Canoeing down the Snake River, rock climbing at Dierkes Lake, mountain biking through scenery reserved for Sierra Club calendars. All I had to do was ferret out this fountain of fun and begin a new life of outdoor adventure.

In Wisconsin, the powers that be make it easy for a body to find the right place to relax. Recreation areas are partitioned from the rest of the world by signs that say, in essence, "Play here." It was never hard to find the quarry lake or the fishing hole – the parks departments made sure you had fun in the right place. They didn't want stray revelers yukking it up in a Fun-Free Zone.

So here I am in Idaho, scouring local parks for spots to spin my wheels: I kicked back on a mountain of rocks in Centennial Park; I ate lunch under a canyon spring; I teetered on the edge of a gorge. And soon I realized something. You don't need to look for signs that say, "Activity Zone." You can have fun anywhere 'round here; all it takes is a little creative thinking.

On the subject of creative thinking, I was musing recently about the re-emergence of the Decade of Disco and the Age of the Leisure Suit – the proliferation into pop culture of velour and velvet, of sequins and stardust – of all that is the '70s. And I'm hooked.

I was born in the '70s, and I missed much of the decade. But recent glimpses of the era have awakened my memories of good times. And I've decided to try to relive those good times as best I can.

So I tried to find a way to merge my new passion for the pre-hysteric era and my recent dip into the outdoor scene. And I hit pay dirt.

Under a pile of old shoes and flannel shirts, I discovered roller skates. Not those new-fangled, in-line ice skate wannabes, nooo. My little babies are tan suede, with snazzy orange wheels and a big ol' stopper out in front to prevent me from kissing the pavement. Vintage, sturdy shoes on wheels sure to take me back to my youth, once I strapped on those fluorescent laces and pushed off into the wind.

In search of a relatively unhazardous area to test drive my new wheels, I happened upon Rock Creek Park. With trails winding through majestic scenery, the place was perfect. So I skated. And I skated. And I learned something. Dead leaves and seed pods don't make for a very smooth trail for those traveling on bald wheels less than three inches wide. And it's been a long time since I've been roller skating.

But, trooper that I am, I struggled up the 2 percent grades, I sped down the steep inclines, I even took my skates off road and kicked up some dust. And I survived.

I think I'll practice in my basement a bit before I embark on another rolling adventure. But first I'm going to get some of those sparkling, neon green wheels Olivia Newton-John had in "Xanadu." Yeah, that'll be swell.

Date with disaster

A mountain bike outing doesn't have to end with a crash

By Greg Thomas
Times-News correspondent

KETCHUM – The trail was simply too rough, too steep, too twisting – and it didn't help that my friend was careening downhill on my "other" mountain bike.

The one with lousy brakes.

The impending disaster dawned on me when a bloodcurdling scream echoed through the forest. We were on a trail above the Greenhorn drainage, south of Ketchum, and screams were not what I wanted to hear on a first date.

When the crash finally came, she took it pretty well. She got up and brushed off dirty pine needles, muddy aspen leaves and enough dust to please a buffalo. Then she looked at me, scowled and said, "You ride this hunk of @#!?"

I couldn't blame her. I'd made two cardinal mistakes at her expense – the trail was too difficult and she was using my faulty equipment.

Fortunately, there are enough trails in southern and central Idaho to suit anyone's competence level without sacrificing the skin off one's chin.

That tenet was proven on the second date, when my friend and I cruised the back roads of the East Fork and Cove Creek drainages about 12 miles northeast of Hailey.

To forestall any painful deja vu, I performed some neglected maintenance and got the brakes on her bike working properly. Secondly, we rode on established jeep trails that took us through some rugged country in a not-so-contorting way.

We enjoyed spectacular fall colors, tires crackling over spent leaves as we slieed between hillsides ablaze with a sea of gold and orange. The wind whipped through our hair as we bounced along the dusty double-track trail.

We rocketed down steep hills, riding the brakes at times. We pedaled like demons over flat sagebrush country. And we agonized together when our path ran straight uphill. When it was over, we hopped off, planted our backsides against the base of a pine tree and felt the tired satisfaction sweep through our bones.

Hyndman Peak rose from the foothills to the east. The desert spread out to the south. To the west, at journey's end, lay my house. For a few moments, we feasted our eyes on huge views and enjoyed life's simple pleasures.

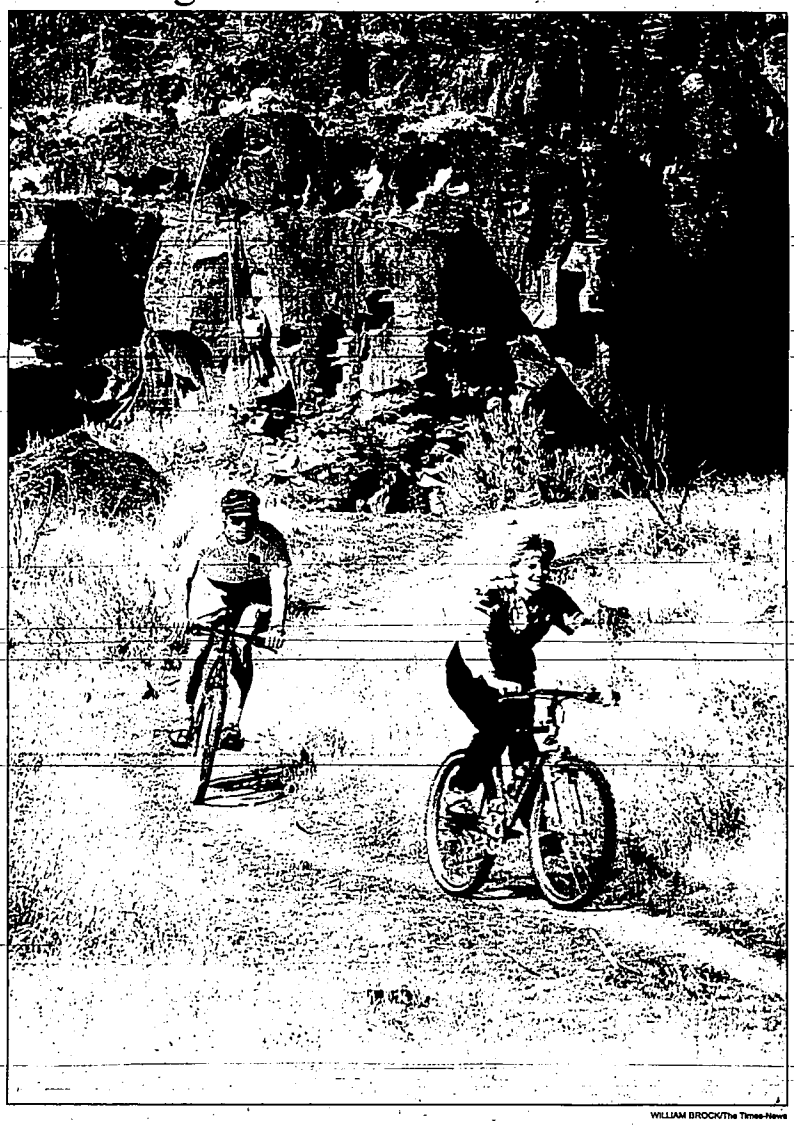

Some biking enthusiasts seek out radical trails that demand perfect technique, a set of thighs like a National Football League linebacker and the courage of a lion. Most of us, however, fall somewhere below that level.

For those riders, here is a list of central and southern Idaho trails that are fun, not fatal:

Rock Creek Trail: Located in Twin Falls near the Old Towne Bridge, the Rock Creek Trail beckons to beginning mountain bikers. From the center of town, head south on Shoshone Street to the bridge. Don't cross the bridge; instead, head down a foot trail on the left (upstream) side of the bridge.

"It's a good trail for beginners because you can follow it up as far as you want and turn around when you feel you've had enough," said Ed Hinkle at Claude's Sports in Twin Falls. At the same time, it's a nice ride because there's a variety of terrain with some small stream crossings and some rocks and logs to negotiate.

Third Fork Trail: Within a 35- to 40-minute drive south of Twin Falls lies the intermediate challenges of the Third Fork Trail. If you find the Rock Creek Trail too small a challenge, then hit the Third Fork. There are plenty of steep climbs and vertical descents that will keep your arms glued to the handlebars.

WILLIAM BROCK/The Times-News

Ben and Alisa Frevert, of Boise, tackle an easy mountain bike trail at Dierkes Lake. Southern Idaho is laced with trails that are well-suited to mountain biking.

To get there, head to Hansen and follow signs to Rock Creek Canyon. Drop a shuttle vehicle at the bottom of the Third Fork trail, which enters Rock Creek from the left. Then continue up Rock Creek, past the Magic Mountain Ski area. Shortly after the paved road turns to dirt, the road forks; turn left toward the Porcupine Springs Campground. There's a trailhead at the campground, or you can continue another four miles along the dirt road until it intersects the Third Fork Trail.

"It's definitely a ride for the intermediate to advanced rider," Hinkle said. "The trail follows through some wooded areas and there is a lot of elevation gain and loss. You'll end up carrying your bike in some areas, but it's a good ride that measures where you're at as a rider."

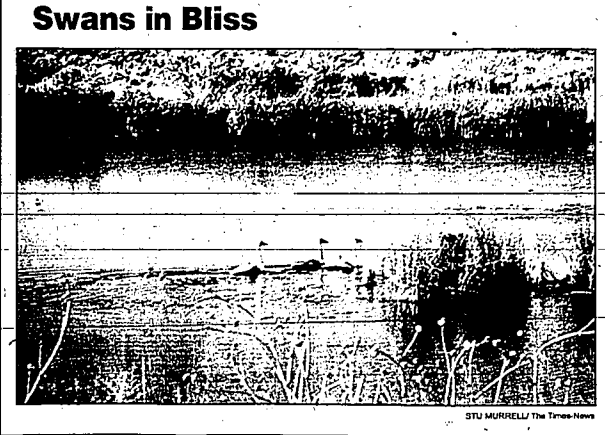

Trail Creek/Corral Creek Loop: This is a great trail for beginners.

"You can ride on the road or you can do a little single track, and it's not difficult – so it appeals to the beginner," said Bob Rosso at The Elephant's Perch in Ketchum.

The trail begins at the Boundary Camp-

Swans in Bliss

STU MURRELL/ The Times-News

A pair of adult Trumpeter swans and a juvenile – known as a cygnet – glide across a still pond near Bliss. Born this summer, the cygnet is the first swan known to have hatched after a four-year Idaho Department of Fish and Game relocation program. So far, the department has released 557 swans in southern Idaho. Waterfowl hunters are advised not to confuse swans with snow geese. Swans have long necks and white wings, while snow geese are equipped with stubbler necks and black wingtips.

Hard winter could mean record kill

The Associated Press

LIVINGSTON, Mont. — Yellowstone National Park's bison herds have grown to an estimated 4,100 animals, and a hard winter could force Montana game wardens to kill a record number, the park's natural resource manager says.

Stu Coleman, chief natural resources specialist, said there is a possibility of more bison being killed by the Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks Department than in 1989-90, when 579 were shot by hunters as they left the park to find winter forage in lower-elevation valleys.

The state argues that a significant portion of Yellowstone bison carry the disease brucellosis, and bison wintering near cattle pasture threaten to pass the disease to domestic cattle herds.

Hunter safety rules must be followed in all seasons

The Times-News

BOISE – 'Tis the season for hunter safety.

"Whenever firearms are present, safety must be first, whether in the home, the vehicle or in the field," said Dan Papp, Idaho Department of Fish and Game Hunter Education coordinator. "Hunter safety must include the wearing of hunter orange and proper handling of firearms."

Papp cited a recent study indicating hunters are eight times more likely to be shot if they are not wearing hunter orange.

"Although Idaho does not require wearing hunter orange, we cannot stress strongly enough that hunters should wear it," Papp said. "Hunter orange was not worn by either of the hunters accidentally killed in northern Idaho earlier this season."

The first rule of hunter safety is to always keep the firearm's muzzle pointed in a safe direction, regardless of the circumstances. Other general rules of firearms safety include:

• Treat every firearm as if it were loaded – even when you think it's not.

• Keep the action of the firearm open except when actually shooting or when storing an unloaded gun.

• Use the right ammunition for your firearm. Carry only one type of ammunition to be sure you will not mix different types.

• Be sure of your target – and beyond. Identify the target, then look past it to be sure it is safe to shoot. Do not shoot where your bullet will ricochet. Bullets can ricochet off rocks, trees, metal, water and other hard or flat surfaces.

• A firearm's safety is a mechanical device, which has the potential to fail, so don't trust the safety. Always point the firearm in a safe direction.

• Take time to fire a safe shot. If unsure, if you must move too quickly, pass up the shot. When in doubt – don't! When you wonder whether you should shoot – don't!

• Once you have determined it's safe to shoot, only then should you place your finger on the trigger and push the safety into the firing position. Keep your finger off the trigger until you're ready to fire.

• Alcohol, drugs and shooting do not mix. Drugs and alcohol do impair your judgment. Keen judgment is essential to safe shooting.

• You must anticipate the unexpected. The possibility of tripping or falling is real, and you must maintain control of the firearm's muzzle and continue to point it in a safe direction. After a fall, check your gun for dirt and damage and make sure the barrel is free of obstructions.

• Unload your gun before attempting to climb a steep bank, rocky terrain or travel across slippery ground.

• When you are alone and must cross a fence, unload your firearm and place it under the fence with the muzzle pointed away from where you are crossing. When hunting with others, and you must cross a fence, unload the gun and keep the action open. Have one of your companions hold the gun while you cross. When over the fence, take your gun and your companion's unloaded gun so that he may cross safely.

• Never use a scope sight as a substitute for binoculars.

• When finished hunting, unload your firearm before returning to camp.

"Remember," Papp said, "rules are safe only when they are obeyed. Hunter safety is always in season!"

Relocated raccoons roam with biologists on their tail

Chicago Tribune

KANEVILLE, Ill. — As suburban sprawl causes a surge in the raccoon population, public perception of the furry animal has changed from a pudgy, playful critter to a fat, marauding pest that chews through plastic garbage lids in search of leftovers from last night's meal.

John D. Thompson noticed the shifts in population and consciousness, and after commiserating with animal control experts throughout the area, he sprang into action.

Thompson, director of research at the Max McGraw Wildlife Foundation near the Dundee, Ill., area, is coordinating a rare bit of research on raccoons. The project, believed to be the first of its kind in Illinois and perhaps the country, is a biologist's version of fitting convicts with electronic home-monitoring bracelets.

Forty-five raccoons from the Chicago area — including a couple from Thompson's back yard in St. Charles — are roaming the region wearing collars equipped with an 8-inch antenna and 4-ounce transmitter. This effort, the Raccoon Translocation Study, is a two-year, $90,000 research project aimed at tracking rural, suburban and city raccoons that are trapped, then released into the wild.

Started in the summer of 1993, the project is entering its final months and is organized by the McGraw foundation, the Illinois Department of Conservation, the Illinois Natural History Survey and the Kane County Forest Preserve District.

Preliminary results are mixed. Last year, when 20 rural and suburban raccoons were relocated, 19 of them moved from the preserve; one-third died because of, among other reasons, freezing temperatures. This year, three of the 30 relocated raccoons are missing and one has died, results similar to the survival rate of the Lone Grove resident raccoons, Thompson said.

He declined to answer other inquiries, saying final results should be complete by the fall of next year.

But Maia Mosillo, a University of Illinois graduate biology student who is performing the grunt work of the research, has at least anecdotal evidence proving the resiliency of Chicago raccoons.

She has been chased by one.

Rare bighorn hunt offers chance for healing

PENDLETON, Ore. (AP) — John Groupe sat low in his saddle and rode his horse from camp just as dawn turned the blackness of a high country night into faint shadows.

After hundreds of miles of scouting and stalking Rocky Mountain bighorn in the Eagle Cap Wilderness, the eighth morning of Groupe's hunt held promise of fulfilling his once-in-a-lifetime chance at bagging an Oregon ram.

And somewhere atop Cusick Mountain was a ram, not a record book ram, but one that would end Groupe's ordeal of a grueling hunt and the added strain of coping with the tragic death of his son.

Groupe, of Pendleton, learned on June 29 that he had drawn the tag offering a one-and-only chance for a Rocky Mountain bighorn in Oregon. Then in late July Groupe's 16 year-old-son, Ole, died in a climbing accident on Mount Hood. Groupe was on his first scouting trip when the accident occurred.

"Of course, that added a stress in many ways," Groupe said. "It's been kind of a blessing for me to have something like this hunt to focus on. A guy's got to keep going. And I think my son would have wanted me to go.

"But it was really physically and emotionally draining because of having lost my son and having a once-in-a-lifetime tag," he added.

Strengthened with the knowledge that his son would have urged him onward, Groupe plunged headlong into preparation — without the aid of a professional guide and only a few close friends to ease the workload.

The Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife has allowed bighorn hunting in northeast Oregon since 1978, but drawing a tag is something similar to winning the Oregon Lottery.

"I didn't realize the pressure that is on you," Groupe said. "I'd gone in four times and put 99 miles on my horses plus all the hiking during the six weeks prior to the start of the season.

"During the hunt I put another 94 miles on my horses, plus all the hiking and planning for five or six guys. There was a real fatigue factor," he added.

Opening morning found Groupe and his partners above Frazier Lake at about 9,000 feet in elevation, an area where Groupe had seen rams and had decided was a likely starting place.

"We got up into this hot area and didn't see a thing," he said.

Then, about 5 p.m. that same day, Groupe and the others found themselves lost in a snow storm, still high atop the mountain.

Groupe resorted to a map and compass, using the arrow to point the way off the mountain.

"That's the first time I've ever had to do that," Groupe said. "And wouldn't you know it. I had on Ole's backpack and it was his compass that got us off that hill."

When the sun rose on the second day of the hunt, prospects improved as Groupe and his partners spied seven rams and stalked them, but decided they were too small.

Groupe was looking for two rams in particular — No. 92 and No. 33 — both ear tagged and transplanted more than 10 years ago into the Hurricane Divide.

On the third day, Groupe and his partners moved into Hurricane Creek, in an area where No. 92 was known to hang out near the Echo area.

But what Groupe didn't know was that the holder of the Governor's auction tag, bought for $108,000, had already been to the same area. The holder of that tag can hunt anywhere in the state for two months.

And that hunter had shot No. 92 on the pass between Echo Lake and Billy Jones Lake just two days before Groupe could start hunting.

After hunting the area, Groupe was ready to take another look at Cusick Mountain, back where he had seen the seven rams on the second day of the hunt.

On the evening of the seventh day back at Frazier Lake, Groupe and his partners looked uphill. In the evening light, they could see the rams.

"Not all seven, only about four, but looking up they seemed bigger and I was fooled, I thought it was some bigger rams that got in there," Groupe said. "I didn't sleep all night I was so hyped."

The eighth morning Groupe headed off on foot and slowly peered over the ridge and "just like that, I could see a ram at about 500 yards," Groupe said.

With the cover of nearby trees, Groupe stalked within 400 yards. In the distance, four rams were fighting, butting heads.

"I dropped behind some more trees and went through a gully and finally got within about 250 yards," Groupe said. "I looked around and I was in this little group of trees and the rams where just across a little swale on a little knob. They all had their heads together, just standing there. They didn't even know we were anywhere."

It was about 8 a.m. when Groupe looked for the best rest for his rifle. Finding none, he laid his backpack on a slanted log and fell rock solid into position.

"I waited four or five minutes for them to separate to get a safe shot at the big guy," Groupe said. When the shot rang out, Groupe's hunt of a lifetime came to a sudden end.

The ram scored 165 1/8 points on the Boone and Crockett scale, not enough to make the record book, but satisfying enough.

Groupe's ram was the 100th Rocky Mountain bighorn taken in Oregon since reintroduction started and it was 50th in terms of size.

"So mine wasn't one of the big ones and it wasn't one of the small ones," he said. "How did I feel? I guess you could say I was relieved and excited; you might say very relieved and excited."

ground off of Trail Creek Road east of Ketchum. From Boundary, follow the trail east to Corral Creek and follow the road for three miles. At the old corrals, turn right and take the single-track trail through the trees. Where the trail nearly reaches the main road, stay left. Follow to the Trail Creek Cabin and ride the main road back to Boundary.

Adams Gulch: Turn left off of Highway 75 onto Adams Gulch Road, just north of Ketchum. Follow the road to the Adams Gulch trailhead, then continue on the dirt road. Cut off to Lanes Trail or Shady Side to loop back to the trailhead.

"It's a real nice area to ride this time of the year, as the fall colors really start popping," Rosso reported. "You can ride out the dirt road as far as you want and turn around, or you can take one of the loop trails to make it about an eight- or 10-mile ride."

Greenhorn Trail: South of Ketchum, take the Greenhorn road to the Greenhorn trailhead. Follow the single-track trail three miles to the junction with Lodgepole Creek. Follow Lodgepole and circle Mahoney Butte to the head of Greenhorn, or simply follow Greenhorn to the Independence trailhead.

"There are some pretty good climbs on the Greenhorn Trail that beginners will probably have to push their bikes up," Rosso said. "At the top of Greenhorn, there is a saddle, and Independence Trail swings to the left off of that. You can follow Independence along a ridge and you end up about a mile below the parking area at Greenhorn."

Whichever trail you choose to ride this fall, keep these safety tips in mind: Always wear a helmet, keep your speed under control, watch out for loose rock and dirt and check the brakes on your date's bike!

Kill

Mild winters since then have not pushed large numbers of bison out of the park in search of winter forage. But those mild winters also have allowed the herd to grow from about 2,500 in 1989-90 to a record 4,300 now, Coleman told the Livingston Enterprise in an interview.

"We may have a large-scale flush of bison that will come out of the park," he said.

The bison population, like that of any other species, will expand until it hits a barrier, such as availability of winter range or a physical barrier such as a mountain range.

"Once they fill their (current) environment, they look for somewhere else to go," he said. "The squeeze comes in that (Yellowstone) is a bison-generating machine, and they have nowhere to go."

The 1989-90 bison kill drew nationwide protests and threats of boycott against the state. The Montana Legislature responded by abolishing the right of private individuals to hunt bison and handing the task to state game wardens, coordinating with park rangers.

But the current arrangement is supposed to be temporary, intended to serve until various state and federal agencies draft a permanent bison management plan.

That plan has been in the works for about five years. Coleman said a draft of the plan is expected to be sent to the participating agencies by the end of this year.

Sawtooth lifts fire danger, closures

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS – All restrictions regarding fire danger and wilderness closures have been lifted. Campgrounds have now been placed on reduced service or are closed for the season. We have had a couple of snowstorms, but there is not enough snow in any of the districts for winter recreation.

Hiking: Hiking should still be good on most of the trails. Remember to dress in layers and be prepared for sudden storms. Hunting season is going on throughout the forest, so dress in bright colors and make noise to ensure you aren't mistaken for an animal.

Fire: While there are no restrictions in effect, the fire danger is still high enough for concern. Campers or hunters should make sure their campfires are completely dead before leaving the area and should be extremely careful with cigarettes. If you see smoke, it may be "prescribed burning," which is usually conducted this time of year. You can check with your local forest office to verify it isn't a wildfire.

Firewood cutting: Firewood permits will be available through the end of November, or when roads become closed by weather, whichever comes first. Permits are available at all district offices.

Off-road vehicles: Off-road vehicles may be used on designated roads and trails where permitted. Users should pick up a travel map to make sure the area they are using allows the activity. All-terrain vehicles, such as three- or four-wheelers, are forbidden on all of the trails in the Ketchum Ranger District or the Sawtooth National Recreation Area because trail tread is not wide enough to accommodate them and they can cause extensive damage. Violators will be fined. Travel maps are available at all Sawtooth forest offices.

Campgrounds: While you may use campgrounds that are not gated in the off-season, they will not have many services, such as water, garbage pickup, toilet paper, etc. Please bring your essentials and pack out your trash when leaving the area to ensure the facility will be available the next time you want to use it.

Citizens Against Poaching funds reward program

The Times-News

BOISE – Citizens Against Poaching is funding a reward program for reporting crimes against wildlife. Callers can remain anonymous and collect a reward for helping conservation officers curtail poaching and other thefts of Idahoans' wildlife.

"The CAP program is our most valuable resource in reporting crimes against wildlife," says Idaho Department of Fish and Game Chief of Enforcement Frank NeSmith. "The program helps arrest and convict poachers, conserves wildlife resources, provides more opportunity for legal sportsmen, deters opportunistic poaching and makes you, as citizens, part of the solution."

The CAP hotline generated 237 citations from 505 calls in 1993. These calls, in turn, generated $20,323 in fines and $23,350 in civil penalties. A total of $24,300 in rewards was paid.

The CAP program is interested in poaching tips from across the state, but it is also interested in the slaughter of several bull elk in Utah – just south of the Idaho state line, near the Nevada state line. Information about those crimes will be forwarded to authorities in Utah.

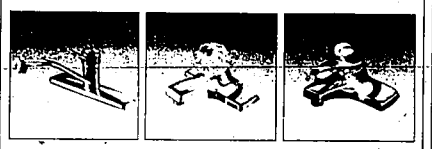

Although other contributions to the nonprofit organization are accepted, the majority of CAP funding comes from the nonrefundable controlled hunt application fee. Prospective hunters can indicate whether or not they wish to direct $1 of the fee to the CAP fund. The application fee does not change.

Most calls occur during fall hunting seasons when more hunters are in the field to witness and report crimes against wildlife. The most common calls report illegal deer harvest.

Since 1981, there have been more than 3,800 citations issued against poachers in Idaho. Citizens can call the CAP hotline at 1-800-632-5999. To report wildlife violations from outside Idaho, citizens can call 1-800-800-WARDEN.

Fly-fishing fanatics film ESPN show on Oregon river

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore. (AP) — You have to get up early to catch Jim and Kelly Watt casting into the currents of the Wood River.

The duo, known among outdoor enthusiasts for their fly-fishing videos and ESPN show, Jim and Kelly Watt's Fly Fishing Video Magazine, are on the river by 6 each morning and on the air at 5:30 a.m. each Saturday.

The Watts spent three days recently at CrystalWood Lodge near the Wood River filming fly-fishing footage for an upcoming ESPN show called Fall Run Wood River Rainbow.

"The fish from Klamath Lake are extraordinary," Jim Watt said about the reason the duo filmed at the Wood River. "There's really no place other than New Zealand's north island where you can expect to catch rainbow trout at 25-30 inches."

If anyone would know, the Watts would. The couple have spent the last eight years traveling around the world filming fly-fishing videos.

Their 50-plus video collection includes fishing in Costa Rica, Venezuela, British Columbia, Colorado, New Brunswick and Alaska. After completing their filming at Wood River, they will return home to Seattle briefly before leaving for Guatemala to film Pacific sailfish. There, Kelly Watt hopes to break the world record by catching a 150-pound sailfish on a 16-pound-test line.

Despite their experiences, the Watts claim they aren't fly-fishing experts, they're television producers. "The fish are the stars and the local guides are the experts," Jim Watt said. "We roll the camera nearly the whole time. We want an honest and real reproduction of the trip." Everything they catch is released.

AP photo

Kelly and Jim Watt practice casting near the Crystal Wood Lodge about 30 miles northwest of Klamath Falls, Ore.

On Monday morning, Rick Shroyer, a guide with CrystalWood Lodge served as the Watt's expert. On Sunday, Rich McIntyre, who owns the lodge with his wife, Karen, took the Watts on a rather wet fly-fishing trip.

McIntyre is a member of the Williamson River Club, which takes care of the Wood and Williamson fisheries. The club, McIntyre said, emphasizes environmentally sound practices and credits itself for lowering the fish hunt from five to one.

Since the Watts do most of the filming a year in advance, the Fall Run Wood River Rainbow probably won't air until next year.

The Watts met while working as freelance television producers for NBC and ABC. They have filmed all over the world.

Jim Watt first considered a fly-fishing film in 1981 when he was in Alaska filming a show on oil for NBC. He called a lodge on Lake Illiamma in Illiaska, went there for a week and filmed a show.

He put a small ad in a fishing magazine and ended up selling six videos. Discouraged, he quit the project.

Five years later, after meeting Kelly, the two decided it was time to resurrect the videos.

A couple of years ago, the videos started making money. The Watts have had their show on ESPN for three years and just signed another three-year contract.

They travel by plane or van with about $120,000 worth of camera equipment including an underwater camera they developed especially to film Pacific sailfish.

Their fly-fishing video series also includes 16 instructional videos on the basics of fly fishing and advanced techniques. That series, by far, is their best selling, Jim Watt said.

Included in their adventure/destination series is an hour-long video on the Wood River called Oregon's Wood and Williamson Trout. It was produced two years ago when McIntyre's operation was based in Fort Klamath.

Durable-goods orders rise slightly

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Factory orders for long-lasting goods, everything from washing machines to tanks, posted a tiny gain in September.

But analysts, noting the previous month's surge and a large increase for the year, said the manufacturing sector remains strong. The economy continues to grow more rapidly than the Federal Reserve would prefer, they said.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that new orders to U.S. factories for durable merchandise rose 0.1 percent in September, the second straight increase. But it was nowhere near August's revised 6.4 percent jump, which was led by higher automobile orders.

Orders for ships and tanks led the way in September as they offset declining demand for cars and aircraft and produced a 2.1 percent advance in all transportation orders.

The overall rise was smaller than analysts predicted. But given other recent data, they said they doubt it is a sign of a slowdown.

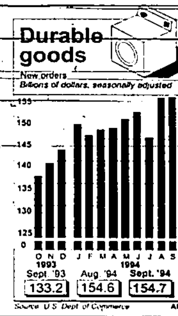

"I think that the modest increase is just a pause after the big August jump," said economist Carl Palash of MCM Moneywatch in New York City. "There is some moderation, but it's still above trend. It won't stand in the way of higher rates."

The Federal Reserve has boosted short-term interest rates five times this year, reversing a five-year era of lower rates. Central-bank policymakers are expected to tack on a sixth increase a week after the Nov. 8 elections.

"There is still a lot of momentum in the economy," said Cynthia Latta of DRI-McGraw Hill, a forecasting firm in Lexington, Mass. "Durable-goods orders are still strong."

In another report, the Chamber of Commerce said its index of business confidence jumped in October to the highest level in 18 months. The index rose 6.8 points from August to 56.7.

The Commerce Department is due to announce Friday how much the economy grew in the third quarter, which ended Sept. 30. Many analysts have revised their projections upwards to the 3 percent range or higher after a spate of recent data showed surprising strength.

Stocks close mixed

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — The stock market ended mixed Wednesday as investors continued to fret about higher interest rates and a weakening dollar.

The Dow Jones industrials slipped 2.36 points to 3,848.23, declining for the fifth consecutive session.

Declining issues narrowly out advancers on the New York Stock Exchange. Big Board volume totaled 322.53 million shares, down from 326.10 million Tuesday.

Small-company stocks outperformed blue-chip issues. Broader market indexes finished higher. The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 1.09 to 462.62.

The NYSE's composite index rose 0.40 to 253.91, the Nasdaq composite index climbed 4.98 to 763.24, and the American Stock Exchange's market value index added 0.68 to 453.53.

For much of the session, stocks mirrored bonds, rallying briefly on weaker-than-expected economic data but retreating after the Treasury's auction of 5-year notes.

Constitutional Amendments

Five amendments to the Idaho Constitution will appear on the November 8, 1994 general election ballot. These amendments have been proposed to the people for ratification following action of the legislature. The proposed amendments, the Legislative Council's Statements of Meaning and Purpose and Effect of Adoption, and the Statements For and the Statements Against are listed as follows:

S.J.R. No. 105

"Shall Section 2, Article III, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended to require appointment, provide powers and duties, and specify limitations on members of a commission for reapportionment to apportion the Senate and House of Representatives and to provide for congressional districts whenever necessary; and shall Section 9, Article V, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho, be amended to provide that the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction in appeals of the legislative apportionment plan of the commission for reapportionment?"

Legislative Council's Statement of Meaning and Purpose

S.J.R. No. 105

The purpose of the proposed amendment to Section 2, Article III, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho, is to create a commission for reapportionment. The Commission will develop new legislative and congressional districts with equal population after the federal census every ten years, a task that the state Legislature currently does. In addition, the amendment to Section 9, Article V, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho, provides that the Idaho Supreme Court would exercise original jurisdiction for challenges to reapportionment. The purpose of this provision is to reduce the time for resolving any challenge to apportionment because the case goes directly to the Supreme Court and is not heard first in lower courts.

Effect of Adoption

This amendment directs the Legislature to establish a commission for reapportionment. The Commission, composed of six members appointed as provided in the amendment, would reapportion the state Legislature and redistrict Congressional seats. If the amendment is approved, the state Legislature would no longer have a role in the reapportionment process. In addition, the amendment provides that the Supreme Court has original jurisdiction in reapportionment issues. This means that challenges would be heard immediately in the highest court, and final results would be expedited.

Statements For The Proposed Amendment

1. The primary goal of apportionment should be to achieve the fair and equal representation of people. However, when apportionment is mixed into the legislative process, partisan and personal interests of the members may subvert the process. Removing the reapportionment process from the Legislature would focus on the legitimate goals of representing the people.

2. The process of apportionment has become more sophisticated and technical. The establishment of a commission would allow greater use of this expertise to assure accuracy in redistricting.

3. Changes in district lines affect the partisan makeup of a legislative body and the careers of individual legislators. It is expecting too much that individuals will put state interest above self interest in such a case. A commission is able to accomplish good government. It does not take into account who is in government.

4. This proposed amendment gives original jurisdiction to the state Supreme Court to hear reapportionment challenges. This would significantly expedite the resolution of reapportionment matters which are always appealed to the final court because of the importance attached to the issues under consideration. Because elections are often held very soon after reapportionment and redistricting, it is important to resolve challenges quickly.

Statements Against The Proposed Amendment

1. The original state Constitution placed apportionment of the Legislature in the Constitution, suggesting the importance given to this issue by the forefathers. Removing this responsibility from the Legislature and creating a commission is a significant relinquishment of legislative authority and power. The people elect legislators and expect them to deal with difficult issues. The only way to be sure that the interests of the people are represented is to retain redistricting in the Legislature.

2. Because members of the Legislature are elected by the people, they are familiar with the legitimate interests of their constituents and are able to preserve and protect local communities of interest.

3. The commission proposed in this amendment is composed of an even number of members which could easily result in a tied vote. Further, decisions must be made by a two-thirds vote. It is possible that no decision would be reached. In such an event, there would be gridlock and the amendment fails to provide for an alternative. This proposed amendment would actually result in making the Idaho Supreme Court the final reapportionment authority.

4. Adopting a constitutional amendment which removes the reapportionment process from the people as well as from the Legislature is a step in an undemocratic direction.

H.J.R. No. 16

"Shall Article I. of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended by the addition of a new Section 22, Article I, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho to provide for rights of crime victims?"

Legislative Council's Statement of Meaning and Purpose

H.J.R. No. 16

The purpose of the proposed amendment to Article I of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is to provide constitutional rights for crime victims. The provision guarantees the victims of crime, as defined by statute, the following rights: to be treated with fairness, respect, dignity and privacy; to timely disposition of the case; to prior notice of judicial and parole proceedings and to receive information about the sentence, incarceration and release of the defendant; to be present at all criminal justice proceedings; to communicate with the prosecution; to be heard at all proceedings considering a plea of guilty, sentencing, incarceration or release of the defendant; to restitution; to refuse contact with the defendant or the defendant's attorney; and to read presentence reports relating to the crime. The same rights are guaranteed to victims of juvenile crime where the offense would be a felony if committed by an adult. The amendment expressly states that a violation of any of the enumerated rights cannot be grounds to dismiss the criminal case or set aside a guilty plea or verdict against the defendant. Likewise, the victim cannot recover civil money damages, costs or attorney's fees from any person or governmental entity for a violation of the victim's rights. Any rights previously conferred upon crime victims by statute are expressly preserved by the amendment. In addition, the Legislature is empowered to enact laws to define, implement, preserve and expand the rights guaranteed in the provisions of the section.

Effect of Adoption

The effect of adopting this amendment would be to extend constitutional status to the rights of crime victims. Although there are existing statutes which provide similar rights, the constitutional guarantees provided in this amendment could not be withdrawn or amended unless approved by a vote of the people. The amendment by its terms does not eliminate or limit any existing statutory rights. The Legislature is also authorized to expand the guaranteed rights by statutory enactment.

Statements For The Proposed Amendment

1. Crime is the single most important public issue in our country and in Idaho. Nationally, a murder occurs every 22 minutes, a forcible rape every 5 minutes and a robbery every 47 seconds. Even in Idaho a murder occurs every 9 days, a forcible rape every day and a robbery every 1.4 days. It is increasingly likely that each of us will be victimized by crime. Constitutional rights for victims are essential to balance the scales of justice.

2. The Constitution is the will of the people, serving as a beacon of fairness and justice. Throughout history our fundamental rights have been recognized and guaranteed by our Constitution. Those accused of a crime have fifteen specific rights within our state Constitution. Victims of crimes have none. This amendment will place ten specific rights for victims in the Constitution without taking away any of the defendants' existing rights.

3. None of these rights will be a significant financial burden to the criminal system, nor will they cause delays. Fourteen other states have approved similar amendments to their constitutions and none has experienced serious problems.

4. Placing these basic rights in our Constitution makes those rights permanent, something that is not possible with statutes, which are vulnerable to change. Passage of a constitutional amendment sends a powerful message to everyone in the criminal justice system and all branches of government that: victims are important; they will be respected; and their rights cannot be ignored.

5. Thomas Jefferson said that "[L]aws and institutions must go hand in hand with progress of the human mind.... [A]s new discoveries are made, institutions must advance also to keep pace with the times." Times have changed since our forefathers penned the original words to Idaho's Constitution. Until now, our justice system has focused primarily upon the rights of defendants. The time has come to balance the scales by adding rights for victims to the Idaho Constitution.

Statements Against The Proposed Amendment

1. The amendment is not effective as a guarantee of rights to victims as a set of standards governing the conduct of law enforcement entities. The amendment has little practical value to the crime victim and, since it is effectively unenforceable, may be ignored with impunity by the courts and law enforcement. By its terms the amendment denies the victim recovery of money damages, costs or attorney's fees if the guaranteed rights have been violated. Thus, the crime victim is without any remedy at law. Only an action in equity, such as a petition for injunctive relief or an extraordinary writ, may be brought by the victim to enforce the enumerated rights. Since costs and fees are not recoverable, however, only affluent victims could afford to go to these lengths to secure the protections of the amendment.

2. The amendment has the very real potential of creating delays in the progress of a criminal case through the court system. The amendment requires that the crime victim be notified of court proceedings; gives the victim the right to be present at such proceedings and to be heard when a plea of guilty, sentencing, incarceration or release of the defendant is being considered. In order to accommodate these requirements, the time frame within which the case will proceed becomes dependent upon the crime victim's schedule. Proceedings may be delayed because the victim is unavailable. This will slow the criminal justice process and delay punishment of the defendant.

3. The amendment fails to define crime victim and the scope of its protection is unclear. The Legislature must define who is a victim by enacting a statute. Each year the Legislature could broaden or narrow the statutory definition, with the result that a person may be a victim one year and not the next. The amendment does not succeed in extending constitutionally-protected status to crime victims as a whole and only those within the Legislature's current definition will be protected in any given year.

4. The amendment opens an offender's presentence investigation report to the victim of the crime but fails to assure that the confidentiality of the report will be respected by the victim or the victim's family. Traditionally, these reports have been accessible only to the prosecutor, the defendant, the court and the preparing agency. The courts rely on these reports to obtain complete, accurate data from numerous sources, including the defendant, in order that an appropriate sentence may be imposed, and the defendant is expected to cooperate fully in discussing his or her criminal history. The defendant will have an incentive to conceal information if it may be made public by a victim or victim's relative, and the courts will be deprived of information necessary to impose an appropriate sentence.

5. The amendment will be costly to administer. To insure that the crime victim's rights are being met, governmental agencies will incur additional expenditures in personnel costs for which no additional funding is provided. Moreover, the extent of these increased costs cannot be adequately assessed at this time since those victims to whom a duty of compliance is owed is left to future statutory definition. It will cause particular financial hardship if the Legislature extends these constitutional guarantees to victims of misdemeanors as well as felonies.

S.J.R. No. 109

"Shall Section 23 of Article III, Section I of Article IV, Section 3 of Article IV, Section 6 of Article IV, Section 19 of Article IV, Section 20 of Article IV, Section 27 of Article V, and Section 7 of Article IX, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended to change the title of the State Auditor to State Controller, and to prohibit the State Controller from performing any post-audit functions?"

Legislative Council's Statement of Meaning and Purpose

S.J.R. No. 109

The purpose of the proposed amendment to Section 23, Article III; to Section I, Article IV; to Section 3, Article IV; to Section 6, Article IV; to Section 19, Article IV; to Section 20, Article IV; to Section 27, Article V and to Section 7, Article IX of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is to change the title of the State Auditor to State Controller and to prohibit the State Controller from performing any post-audit functions within state government. "Post-audit" means examining the financial books and records of state agencies, including expenditures after payment and revenues after collection.

Effect of Adoption

This amendment would change the name of the "State Auditor" to "State Controller" and maintain the current auditing practices of the State of Idaho by prohibiting the State Controller from auditing state government. Currently, financial post-audits are performed by auditors who work for the Idaho Legislature.

The current duties of the State Auditor are the type generally associated with a controller, including prescribing accounting systems with proper internal controls, disbursing funds, paying bills, managing data processing and developing fiscal information. Under generally accepted auditing standards, those performing accounting functions are not independent from their operations and, therefore, should not audit their own activities. This amendment would keep that conflict from occurring and would allow the State Auditor (renamed "Controller") to concentrate on functions identified with the title of controller.

If this amendment is not adopted, the State Auditor will take over post-audit responsibility of state government. In 1986, the Idaho Supreme Court ruled that the State Legislature had constitutional authority to do post-audits of state government. For practical reasons, and by mutual agreement with the Legislature, the State Auditor deferred implementing the Supreme Court ruling. In 1990, the Legislature passed a statute implementing the Court ruling and specifying that the State Auditor would assume future post-audit responsibility in 1994. If this amendment is not adopted, the State Auditor will take over post-audit responsibility of state government in accordance with that law and start hiring auditors to perform that work.

If this amendment is adopted, the Legislature will continue to conduct post-audits and the current practices will be maintained.

Statements For The Proposed Amendment

1. Passage of this proposed amendment will allow the existing audit system to continue unchanged. Cost-efficient, independent audits have been performed by the Legislature for the past 23 years. If this amendment is not passed, there will be unnecessary growth in state government caused by duplication of audit effort, at a cost the State Auditor has estimated to be between $300,000 and $500,000 per year.

2. This amendment is needed so the state can meet federal audit standards. The federal government has advised the State Auditor that auditors of state agencies receiving federal funds must be independent. Because the State Auditor is responsible for statewide accounting records and financial reports, he is not independent. If this amendment is not passed, federal funds received by the State of Idaho (estimated to be $820 million in fiscal year 1994) may be in jeopardy.

3. The State Auditor and both political parties in the Legislature are united in recommending passage of the proposed amendment. They know that the state's financial accountability will be best preserved by maintaining the current audit system.

4. The name change from State Auditor to State Controller is needed to avoid confusion by appropriately conforming the name of the office to the actual duties of that office. If this amendment is not passed, the State Auditor, who has performed no post-audits of state agencies for decades, will have to hire additional audit personnel.

Statements Against The Proposed Amendment

1. In a 1986 lawsuit brought by the former State Auditor against the Legislature, the Idaho Supreme Court ruled that the founding fathers of the State of Idaho intended that the State Auditor do audits. The Legislature needs to realize that there is a separation of powers between branches of government in the Constitution of the State of Idaho. The Auditor is in the executive branch of government and auditing, as found by the Supreme Court, is just as much an executive branch function as it is a legislative branch function.

2. A system or methods could be devised to meet the independence standard. For example, an independent accounting firm could be retained to audit the official books and records of the State of Idaho.

3. The State Auditor is as capable as the state Legislature in conducting financial post-audits of state agencies. Prior to the creation of the Legislative Auditor in 1971, financial post-audits of state agencies had been conducted in the executive branch of state government.

4. There is no need to change tradition by renaming the State Auditor the State Controller. This name has worked well for over a century.

H.J.R. No. 17

"Shall Article XVIII, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended by the addition of a new Section 12, Article XVIII, to allow the Legislature to provide for optional forms of county government, and to allow the electors of any county to retain their present form of county government or select an optional form of county government by majority vote of that county's electors voting thereon?"

Legislative Council's Statement of Meaning and Purpose

H.J.R. No. 17

The purpose of the proposed amendment to Article XVIII of the Constitution of the State of Idaho, is to allow the Legislature to provide optional forms of county government which could be adopted by a majority vote of the electors of the county voting on the question. Currently, the form of county government, consisting of a three member board of county commissioners, and an elected sheriff, county assessor, clerk of district court, county coroner, county treasurer and prosecuting attorney, is specified in the Constitution.. No county may deviate from this mandated form. With the adoption of this amendment, the Legislature could provide alternative forms. The electors of a county could choose to adopt any of the alternatives. If an alternative form were adopted, the electors could later choose to return to the original form.

Effect of Adoption

The effect of adopting this amendment would be to allow electors of a county a choice among optional forms of county government authorized by the Legislature. No change in the form of county government could be made unless adopted by the electors of the county. The existing form of county government would be available as one option, while other options might eliminate some elected officers, make some officers appointed, or consolidate some offices.

Statements For The Proposed Amendment

1. After more than 100 years, it is no longer true that one size fits all. In the 1990 census, county populations ranged from 727 to 205,775. With this diversity of size, the demands upon the county government vary widely. The form of county government must be flexible enough to be responsive to the needs of each county.

2. Adoption of this amendment allows the people to exercise their right to vote to choose an optional form. Any choice would be by majority vote and, even after an optional form is adopted, could be returned to the original form or changed to any other option by a majority vote. Allowing optional forms of government respects the rights of freedom of choice.

3. Options could be authorized which would reduce the number of elected county officers, thereby allowing greater efficiency and cost reductions in county government. Some counties are too small to require the number of elected officers now required.

4. Some county officials who are now elected on a partisan ballot could be appointed on a non-partisan basis. Because of the increasing demands for professionalism and expertise, the option to appoint officers could remove politics from the process, but assure that the official was well qualified to perform the duties of the office.

5. The existing three member board of county commissioners, with an additional six elected county officers, is a government with no "head." There is no clear executive authority and no way for the electors to hold anyone responsible. Every other level of government in America has an executive, a legislative and a judicial department. But in Idaho counties the commissioners are the executive and legislative branches, while other elected officers also have executive powers outside the authority of the county commissioners. When there is a problem, the electors do not know who to hold responsible.

Statements Against The Proposed Amendment

1. The present form of county government is working well, has worked well for one hundred years, and change for the sake of change is not necessary or wise. With one hundred years of experience, we know what to expect from the present form.

2. The present county governments operate in a cost efficient manner, and any new form threatens to be more costly. Each elected officer is responsible to the people to conduct his office in an efficient manner. Eliminating elections of county officers would result in a less responsible form of government.

3. The existing form of county government is close to the people so that the people know their elected officials and can hold them responsible for actions taken.

4. While this amendment claims to allow optional forms of county government, actually only those optional forms which are authorized by the Legislature would be available to county electors. There is no guarantee of the options to be provided. Consequently, this might be a very limited and ineffective grant of power to the counties.

H.J.R. No. 24

"Shall Section I, Article IV, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho be amended to delete the requirement that the governor, secretary of state, state auditor, state treasurer, attorney general and superintendent of public instruction must reside in Ada County during their term of office but to provide that all state executive officer's official offices must be located in Ada County?"

Legislative Council's Statement of Meaning and Purpose

H.J.R. No. 24

The purpose of the proposed amendment to Section I, Article IV, of the Constitution of the State of Idaho is to remove the requirement that state executive officers - the governor, secretary of state, state auditor, state treasurer, attorney general and superintendent of public instruction - must reside in Ada County during their terms of office. The amendment also states that the official location for each of the executive offices shall be in Ada County.

Effect of Adoption

If the amendment is adopted, all executive officers of the state, including the lieutenant governor, may reside in any county of the state during their term of office even though their official offices are located in Ada County.

Statements For The Proposed Amendment

1. At the time the state Constitution was written the provision for requiring that elected officials reside in Ada County was a practical matter. Modes of travel were considerably different than today making the time to travel any distance a significant factor. The state officer was limited in the time he could spend in the office or less his or her residence was near the seat of government. Today we have more options for mode of travel, we can travel faster and further so that if an officer's residence is not within Ada County, it does not have to significantly affect his availability to staff and official duties.

2. The technology of today with telephone conference calls, fax machines and computer modems allows for nearly instant access and almost unlimited communication regardless of one's physical location. Today officials can conduct most business operations from any number of locations outside the official place of business, thus making travel time and place of residence a less significant factor.

3. There is no parallel or similar residency requirement for officials elected to the federal level of government service to also reside in near proximity to the seat of government.

Statements Against The Proposed Amendment

1. Most official functions are centered in Boise. Many of the offices and the location of the office require the physical presence of the official, especially those involving staff and scheduled business appointments. Winter conditions can still turn a short commute into a longer one resulting in costly delays and missed appointments. In the past an official attempted to conduct the business of his office a considerable distance from Boise. Overall, it was found the inconvenience proved to be costly and inefficient.

2. Not only is official business conducted in Boise, but it is also the center of many related political, social and economic activities. Participation in important events would be considerably more limited if an official did not live in near proximity. The official's presence at these functions confirms to the citizens of the state that their elected representatives are on the job and that their work has not been taken over by a "system" which is not responsible to the electorate.

3. To require elected officials to reside in Ada County demonstrates that any candidate for the office is willing to make necessary changes in his or her personal life in order to fulfill the duties of the office. Residence in Ada County is an affirmative demonstration by the official of his willingness to serve efficiently and effectively.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE®

Bobby Wolff

"People who have no weaknesses are terrible; there is no way of taking advantage of them."
—Anatole France.

"It took a perfect defense to beat me," lamented South. "There was nothing I could have done to dodge the bullet."

Look over the play to see if you can spot something South could have done to give East a moving target.

Dummy's heart ace won and South led a low trump from dummy. East hopped up with his ace to shift to diamonds and South was in trouble. The finesse lost to West's king and the diamond return put the defenders in position to score a diamond ruff. There was no escape. When West won his trump king, East ruffed a third round of diamonds, netting one down.

East's defense was excellent. Had he played low on the first trump lead, South would have made his game easily. West would have won but could not have attacked in diamonds and South would have held his losses to only two trumps and a diamond.

What might have kept East from finding the killing defense?

South should have led the trump jack from dummy at trick two. It would have cost nothing to lead the jack and it might have persuaded East to play low to give West an opportunity to score a trick with Q-x. When South chose a low trump instead, East concluded there was no finessing position and it was easier for him to make the best play.
